Similar action has already been taken by the Government for the protection of forests and water sources in the West. In 1896 a large tract of land of more than half a million acres was purchased from the Blackfeet Indians, which was later included in the Flathead Reserve. Already there are 41 national forest reserves in the Western States and Territories, with an aggregate area exceeding 46,000,000 acres. There is no reason why the policy which now meets with general approval there should not be inaugurated in the East.

The States where the land affected lies have already, through their legislatures, consented to Federal ownership and control of the proposed reserve.

It is estimated by competent authority that these reserves, representing the Government's investment or holdings in the interest of forest and stream preservation in these Western States, have to-day an aggregate commercial value of more than $100,000,000. The ultimate investment proposed by the present bill is only one-tenth of this amount, and yet it provides for a forest reserve which will protect the sources of the 10 important rivers in the Southeastern States.

As illustrating the necessity for such action as is now proposed, attention may be called to the fact that in every civilized country it has been found absolutely necessary to preserve the forests on mountain slopes, and especially is this true in more southern latitudes. Everywhere it has been found vastly cheaper to preserve existing forests on these mountains than to reforest such regions after the former forests have once been destroyed. Thus, in Italy the Government is endeavoring to restore the forest cover which was destroyed by former private owners on certain slopes where now the floods are excessive; and the estimated cost of this forest restoration is $12,000,000 for half a million acres.

In France the Government, in endeavoring to restore the forest on a mountain area 800,000 acres in extent, has already expended $12,000,000, and it is estimated that an additional expenditure of $28,000,000, or a total expenditure of $40,000,000, will be necessary before this result has been fairly attained. And this large expenditure of $24 per acre in Italy, or $50 per acre in France, is only expected to start the growth of the new forest on these regions, which new growth must always be imperfect. The original soils, which were a millenium in forming, and the original forest conditions, which were centuries in growing, will require centuries more for their full restoration.

In conclusion, it will be of interest to note that many European forest reserves under government administration yield a large annual income; and though no such conditions may be looked for from this forest reserve at once, it is confidently expected that in a very few years, probably not more than five, it will be self-sustaining, and that in the near future it will yield a net return to the Government. During the past year one of the Western reserves yielded an income of $20,000 over and above the cost of its protection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Forest Reservations and Protection of Game will be stated.

Mr. ALDRICH. If there is a report from the Secretary of Agriculture, I should like to have it read.

Mr. BURTON. I hope the Senator will wait until we get the committee amendments acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, The Chair will state that there is no report on the table other than the report of the committee, which has been read.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to move an amendment.

Mr. QUAY. If the Senator will allow me, I was just about to offer to the gentlemen who are opposed to the statehood bill a dry-goods box about half full of my speech on the tariff in 1894, not yet delivered before the Senate, which might be used on this occasion to serve their purposes with benefit to the country.

Mr. SPOONER. The statute of limitations has run against that speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUAY. That would be as good a weapon on this question as the report which has just been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendments will be stated.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game was, in section 2, on page 2, line 5, after the word "Provided," to insert "That the Secretary of Agriculture shall have the right to reject any or all bids: And provided further."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 3, line 3, after the word "lands," to insert:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise, as to such lands, all the rights and powers granted in said act or acts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, on page 4, line 10, after the word "reserve," to strike out "and to" and insert "and violations of such rules and regulations shall be punished as provided by law for other forest reserves; and he may;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby empowered and directed to make such rules and regulations and establish such service as he may deem necessary for the care, protection, control, and use of such forest reserve, and violations of such rules and regulations shall be punished as provided by law for other forest reserves; and he may sell such wood, timber, and other products as may be removed without injury to the forest.

Mr. BURTON. I want to move an amendment, which includes the three words "and he may," in line 12, and strikes out all the balance of that section, if it be proper to make that motion now. I propose to leave off the three words "and he may," which is part of the committee amendment. I will ask, first, that the amendment be amended by striking out the words "and to," in line 10, and inserting "and violations of such rules and regulations shall be punished as provided by law for other forest reserves," and let the amendment stop there.

Mr. KEAN. On what page is that amendment?

Mr. BURTON. On page 4.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not understand what it is the Senator desires to do.

Mr. BURTON. I want to move to strike out all after the word "reserves," in line 12, section 7, which is not a committee amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator wants to amend it, I do not suppose anybody will object; but I do not understand it at all.

Mr. BURTON. My motion is to amend by striking out in line 10, on page 4, the words "and to"—that part of it is a committee amendment—and including all the words proposed to be inserted by the committee amendment, excepting the words "and he may." I want to move further to strike out all of that section after the word "reserves."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator desires to offer an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; I want to offer an amendment to the committee amendment by excluding the three words "and he may."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 7, on page 4, line 12, after the word "reserves," it is proposed to strike out of the committee amendment the words "and he may," and also the words:

Sell such wood, timber, and other products as may be removed without injury to the forest: Provided, That no wood, timber, or other products shall be sold otherwise than under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, but no sale of such products shall be made at less than the appraised value thereof: And provided further, That the proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BURTON. I desire now to have the committee amendment, excluding the three words "and he may" that I have moved to strike out, adopted, or is the committee amendment already adopted by the action of the Senate?

Mr. KEAN. Do I understand the Senator from Kansas to propose to strike out the language of the bill as it originally stood from line 13 to line 20, at the end of the section?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; I move to strike out all of the section after the word "reserves."

Mr. CARMACK. Has the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the committee amendment been adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been. The Chair sees no objection to the Senator offering his entire amendment to the committee amendment, to strike out the three words he speaks of, and also to strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. BURTON. Very well, Mr. President, I make that motion. If the Senate will give me attention for just one moment I will say——

Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I wish the Senator would proceed. I want to hear what he has to say in favor of this amendment.

Mr. BURTON. I will say that I move this amendment at the suggestion of the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and after carefully considering the matter, for the reason that this part of the section allows the Secretary of Agriculture to begin at once to sell timber from this reservation. It was thought it would be better, if that was done, that this power should be given by a future Congress. When this bill was considered it was the purpose to give the Secretary of Agriculture power to sell the ripe timber from the reservation, and that he might begin doing that at once after obtaining the lands. It was thought better not to give him that power, and that no timber at all should be sold until at least some time in the future when it would appear that he had the timber for sale and that it could be sold at an advantage to the reservation.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not see exactly why that language should be stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. And it ought not to be.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course, if the Secretary of Agriculture did not have the timber to sell, he could not sell it, and therefore the provision would be inoperative until such time in the future as there might be timber.

Mr. BACON. On this side of the Chamber we can not hear what is being said.

Mr. SPOONER. I say that under the language of the bill, as it now stands without the proposed amendment, it simply confers authority upon the Secretary of Agriculture to sell; and, of course, if there be not at this time or within a year or two years any timber that can be sold without detriment to the reservation and the public interests, none would be sold. The existence merely of authority in a Cabinet officer to conserve the public interests in a contingency is not at all dangerous. It is evidently contemplated by the Senator, so far as his remarks show, that there will be a time when the public interests will require that the Secretary of Agriculture shall sell certain timber. Now, why not provide that in the bill, instead of leaving it to be provided by additional legislation at some future session of Congress? What is the real object of striking out this provision?

Mr. BURTON. Well, Mr. President, I do not think there is any good reason for striking out that part of the section. I will be candid about the matter; but it was thought that it would raise objections that might defeat the bill, and I want to pass the bill. If the Senate agrees to the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], I will withdraw my motion and let the committee amendment stand.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not able to value the thought unless I know who thought it. It seems to me that the bill is better with the provision in it if authority is ever to be given.

Mr. BURTON. Then, if there be no objection, I will withdraw my motion and ask that the committee amendment be adopted.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I will call the attention of the Senator who has this bill in charge to lines 17 and 18, on page 4, where this language is used:

But no sale of such products shall be made at less than the appraised value thereof.

I have not very carefully examined this measure, but I have failed, on a cursory examination, to see any machinery or any provision that is connected with that section by way of providing for an appraisement. It seems to me the legislation will be defective unless that matter of appraisement is committed to some officer or some committee or some board. What would the Senator say on the face of this bill as to who is to make this appraisement which is to control the action of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, section 8 requires the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase these lands under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and if we are going to pass the bill and expect him to carry it out, I think it better give him full discretion in the matter. If the Senator will note section 8, he will find that it gives the Secretary sufficient power to carry out the purposes of the measure.

Mr. QUARLES. I want to suggest to my friend from Kansas that section 8 seems to confine itself to the purchase of lands, whereas section 7 relates to the disposition of timber that is sold on the lands. I do not see any provision for appraisal.

Mr. BURTON. I misunderstood the question of the Senator. I was looking at another section. There is no provision further than to allow the Secretary of Agriculture to sell this wood and timber under such regulations as he may prescribe. If you will notice the proviso to the section you will find:

That no wood, timber, or other products shall be sold otherwise than under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

That gives him full authority to make the sale; and the remainder of the sentence contemplates that he shall make the sale by an appraisement. I suppose this would control the Secretary.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, if it is the purpose of the Senator in charge of the bill to leave this matter to the Secretary of Agriculture in his discretion, it seems to me that this clause ought to be stricken out, because, as it stands here, it is an absolute limitation on his power that he can not sell until a certain appraisement shall be made, and the bill does not provide who is to make the appraisement.

Mr. BURTON. That is the only limitation, though if the appraisement is to be made, it is to be presumed that the Secretary of Agriculture is competent to have the timber properly appraised.

Mr. NELSON. May I ask the Senator from Kansas a question for information?

Mr. BURTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. Is there any provision in this bill as to how this timber shall be sold; whether at private sale or public sale, and is there any minimum price fixed in the bill at which it shall be sold?

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, it would be impossible to fix a minimum price in a bill relative to a body of timber covering about 4,000,000 acres and having 135 different species of hard wood. That could not be done. I think to allow the Secretary of Agriculture the power to dispose of this timber with only one qualification, and that is that he shall have it appraised and sell it at not less than the appraised value, is sufficiently guarded.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire as to what class of timber it is intended that the Secretary of Agriculture shall dispose of?

Mr. BURTON. Ripe timber—that is, timber which has reached its full growth, and where it is of no more advantage to the forest for it to remain there. He is allowed to cut that and allow the small timber to grow up.

Mr. SPOONER. Does ripe timber mean dead timber?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, no, sir. I suppose the term "ripe timber" means developed timber. I will refer this matter, however, to some of the Senators from timber States.

Mr. SPOONER. Is not developed timber valuable for preservation for the functions of a forest reserve?

Mr. BURTON. It may be or it may not be. If there was a great deal of developed timber in the section of this forest that was ripe and ready for the market, and a great deal of small timber coming on, the soil could be preserved by cutting off a portion of the ripe timber just as well as by the younger timber. The forest would not be injured and the ripe timber would be valuable for sale.

Mr. SPOONER. Then the object is to preserve the soil and not the forest?

Mr. BURTON. In preserving the soil on the mountain sides and on the slopes you help to make them a water reservoir, and in that way preserve the forests and prevent the floods below.

Mr. SPOONER. Is the authority given in the bill to sell the timber restrained in any way?

Mr. BURTON. No. This matter must be intrusted to somebody just as the forest reserves in the West are now intrusted to the Secretary of the Interior for their preservation.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not recollect any provision for the selling of timber in the forest reserves of the West.

Mr. BURTON. I do not know that there is.

Mr. SPOONER. The object of those reservations is to preserve the timber, to protect them from fire, and all that.

Mr. BURTON. This is the highest mass of mountains between the Rocky range and the Alleghenies. It is heavily timbered on all its slopes, and on the cap as well. The streams flowing through several States rise in and along the apex of these mountains, and the destruction of the timber causes immense floods.

I did not intend to enter upon a discussion of this bill, because it has been discussed quite fully.

Mr. SPOONER. If the destruction of timber causes these immense floods, why is the Secretary of Agriculture given authority to destroy this timber?

Mr. BURTON. Because a great deal of this timber may be sold without in any way impairing the forest reservation. Take the forest reservations of Germany, of Italy, but more especially those of Sweden and Germany. They are a source of great revenue, without in any way injuring the forest reserves, and this in time will become a source of great revenue, although that is the least of the reasons why this bill should pass.

Mr. President, since I am on my feet and some questions have been asked about this bill, I wish to say that this is a species of what might be termed water legislation. It is a twin brother to irrigation. Man can do nothing to increase or decrease the rainfall. That he can do so is a fallacy which has been exploded by experiment. It rains just as much to-day in the valley of the City of Mexico, and no more, than it did in the time when Cortez made a conquest of that country. Every range of mountains long enough and tall enough makes an arid district. Man can do nothing to increase or decrease the rainfall; but a great deal can be done, everything can be done, and, in my judgment, in time, all the necessary work will be done, to conserve and control the waters that fall. The time is coming in this country when destruction by flood will cease, and when we shall control the rainfall and the waters from the melting snow by artificial and natural depositories or reservoirs. We shall do it in more ways than one. We shall do it by conserving the rainfall in the arid districts.

Take the western boundary of Kansas. We have there 19 and 20 inches of rainfall; and 30 inches is enough for a crop. Nature has given us natural reservoirs all over that country. If in time we catch the rainfall and conserve it in the natural basins, we may reclaim a large percentage of that country. That is true with the entire arid district from the British possessions to the Rio Grande. The object of this bill is to conserve the water in another way, by utilizing the forests on the high slopes and the ridges of the mountains. The rain falls on the timber; it is broken by the leaves, falls gently on the ground, the soil is held by the forest, and the water goes gradually through the rock down into the streams, and is utilized for power; but destroy the forest and the water comes down and floods and destroys water powers and destroys agricultural lands below.

Within the last three or four years we have spent five hundred millions of money for war, and I approve of that expenditure. We in this Congress are spending millions of money for the Navy and the Army, and I approve of the expenditure; but the time is coming and is near at hand when we shall want to expend vast sums for peace and for peaceful pursuits. I imagine that one of the great domestic questions that will concern the American people in the near future is the conservation of the water that falls. The ingenuity of the American will in time prevent the floods from going to the Lower Mississippi. If the millions of property that have been destroyed in the floods this spring could have been saved and applied toward irrigation, toward forest preservation, toward diverting the flood waters from the streams farther up and catching them in natural reservoirs, not alone in the arid districts, but along the Ohio and the Mississippi and the tributaries of those vast streams that drain a continent—I say if we will spend money along that line, in the near future we shall be able to prevent the destructive floods in the Lower Mississippi.

I had not intended, Mr. President, to enter into this discussion so widely. It is the spirit of this bill, if you will notice it in all its provisions, to say to the Secretary of Agriculture, "You are commissioned to go down there and in six States along the high ridges of the Appalachian Range purchase from time to time, as you may make contracts that are wise, 4,000,000 acres of land—not all at once, for it is to run for a term of years—and to obtain gifts from corporations and wealthy individuals that own large tracts there, for the purpose of having a vast forest reserve, the primary object of which is forest preservation and the storage of water to prevent floods below." I do not think we had better limit the Secretary of Agriculture too much. I imagine that the present occupant of that office is admirably equipped to carry out the provisions of this bill, and I also believe that any man who may succeed him will be equally well equipped to carry out the provisions of this bill.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in opening Indian reservations where there was timber, we have always provided for an appraisement of the timber and fixed a minimum price, and provided that it should be sold at public sale at not less than the appraised value. Now, here there is no protection at all. The Secretary of Agriculture can sell at any price he may see fit.

Mr. BURTON. May I interrupt the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. In order to save time, as I know the Senator is in a great hurry and does not want to take up any time, I suggest that he present his amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest to the Senator that unless the bill is amended in the line I suggest I think it is a very dangerous bill.

Now, as I understand it, this bill will involve an expenditure of some ten or fifteen million dollars, and its chief object, I understand, is to promote rainfall in the Appalachian Mountains—rainfall in a country that is not within the limits of the arid belt. I can sympathize with the Senator from Kansas in favor of irrigation——

Mr. BURTON. May I again interrupt the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator will not want, I think, upon reflection, to have that statement go into the RECORD. The fallacy that man can do or ever has done anything to increase or decrease rainfall has long since been exploded.

Mr. NELSON. Then I misunderstood the Senator's remarks a moment ago. I certainly got the impression that the purpose was the protection of the forests, and that the taking care of them would tend to conserve the rain and give more water in that region. That was the impression I got. I can see some object in looking after rain out on the arid plains of Western Kansas and Nebraska, but why should it be done in the Appalachian region, which is subject to a great deal of rain? The hot wave coming from the Gulf in the early winter, February and March, meets a colder current coming across the Atlantic, and frequently produces immense floods. It is those great floods that come from the Appalachian Range into the Ohio and its tributaries which produce the great floods of the Mississippi River.

I had occasion two or three years ago as chairman of a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce to investigate the matter of floods in the Mississippi River. Up to that time I had supposed that a large part of floods in that lower river came from the Missouri River and from the Upper Mississippi, but I found, much to my astonishment, that the great floods of the Mississippi River came from the Ohio and its tributaries. According to the report of the Weather Bureau those great winter storms of rain, sleet, and snow which brought on the early floods in the Mississippi River came from the fact that a hot current from the Gulf Stream moved up through the Gulf States and encountered along the apex of the Allegheny Mountains colder currents from the Atlantic, and that led to precipitation and the great floods in the Ohio and its tributaries.

Mr. BURTON. I want to say that there is nothing in this bill, and there never will be in any bill I support, which looks to trying to make it rain or to keep it from raining. That is impossible. We have given that up. What makes it rain is something that man can not reach. It is the currents of the air. But this bill, I think the Senator understands, is to conserve the water and to prevent the floods, just the same as if we would tap the Arkansas River in Colorado and run the water out into a natural reservoir through a canal, and have a number of canals built, and when the floods come lift the head gates and prevent the water from going below. This is to preserve the forest, so that the water when falling there—and just as much water as nature has provided will fall if every tree was cut off the mountain sides——

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to interrupt him? Is it not a fact that as land is improved and cultivated and plowed it absorbs the water more rapidly and prevents floods, and is not that a better protection against floods than preserving forests?

Mr. BURTON. That protects in a small way. It is not better by any means. That is a small way to protect it.

Mr. NELSON. I have heard of planting forests on the prairies——

Mr. BURTON. But while I am on my feet let me say that you can not plow the slope of the mountain from the apex. You can not cut down those forests and plow up the mountain side. The precipitation along this ridge is greater than anywhere on the continent except in Puget Sound, and the precipitation would be just as great if there were not a single tree there. It would be just as great if every single acre that could be plowed was plowed.

I wish to say again that man has never done anything and never can do anything to increase or decrease rainfall.

Mr. NELSON. I was induced to make these remarks because of the connection I had with an investigation of the subject of the floods of the Mississippi River. It was a great question, how to protect the lower country, below the mouth of the Ohio, from the great floods of the Mississippi River. When I started with that investigation, my first impression was that those floods came from the Missouri River and the Upper Mississippi River, but on taking testimony and examining the documents and data bearing upon the subject I came to the conclusion, and I think that was the consensus of the subcommittee and of the whole committee, that the floods of the Mississippi River to a large extent came from the Ohio and its tributaries.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator from Minnesota permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALDRICH in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Minnesota is entirely mistaken as to the argument in favor of this bill. The trouble is not that we have not enough water down there, but that we have too much. The rainfall in the Southern Appalachian Mountains is about a hundred inches a year. If you clear these mountains, that immense rainfall will go suddenly and rapidly down the mountain side by reason of the deforestation and enter into those streams which are tributary to the great rivers the Senator has mentioned and produce sudden floods in those rivers.

The object of this bill is to prevent that. If the forest remains untouched, when these heavy rainfalls come the forest covering aids in the absorption of the rainfall by the soil, and once the water enters into the soil, instead of being suddenly precipitated into the streams it is held by the soil in a sort of a reservior and is delivered to the streams gradually and furnishes water as the streams need it, thereby preserving the regularity of the streams and preventing these sudden floods.

That is the argument in favor of the bill. We do not want to make any more rain. We have already too much rain. We want to prevent the rainfall from producing sudden floods.

Mr. NELSON. Still, Mr. President, in spite of the statement of the honorable Senator from North Carolina, and while I recognize the fact that there is some force in it, it has always been my understanding that it is far better, in order to prevent overflows, to have the land cultivated instead of keeping it in a wild state as a forest reserve. In its wild state, with the sod on the ground, the water falls and immediately runs rapidly down into the creeks and from the creeks into the rivers, and from the rivers on the west side of the Appalachian range over into the Tennessee, the Cumberland, and the other tributaries of the Ohio. If the land was cultivated, plowed, and improved, if the timber is cut off and the sun is let in, as the rain falls the ground absorbs it, and less water goes into the creeks. That is our experience in Minnesota—that the creeks and streams that were large and overflowing years ago when the country was new and first settled are to-day, where the country has been settled up and farms improved and cultivated, dry most of the year. In the middle of the summer they may be dry for two or three months, a thing we never knew in the early days of the country.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is entirely right about that, provided the mountain lands could be kept in a state of cultivation, but you can not keep them in a state of cultivation like you can other land, because experience has shown that in four or five years after the mountain sides and summit lands are cleared the soil is all washed away. It leaves nothing there but a hard, compact surface, over which the water rapidly flows into the streams and produces these floods. I have been right through this very section of country. I was through there last summer. I saw scores of mountain-side farms which had been cleared up, and in four or five years had been abandoned for the very reason that the soil was washed away and they were no longer capable of producing.

Mr. NELSON. I was under the impression that in this great forest reserve, embracing such a vast country, there were a great many valleys suitable for farming and cultivation. Now, if you make this into one great forest reserve, you prevent those valleys from being cultivated and improved, and in that way you tend to increase the floods.

I have the report that was made by the Committee on Commerce on the question of floods, and I wish to read from it:

> The annual normal rainfall in the different river basins varies greatly. In the Ohio—

And that includes the western part of the Appalachian range—

> it is 44.2 inches; in the Upper Mississippi, 31.9; in the Missouri, 19.4; in the Arkansas, 29.6; in the Red, 39.1, and in the central valley of the Mississippi, including the White and the St. Francis, 51.4 inches (E, 24 and 25). In the Upper Mississippi and the Missouri the rainfall is, as a rule, greatest in May and June. In the Ohio and the central valley it is greatest in January, February, and March (Starling, 22 and 23).

I want to call attention to this fact:

> The greatest and most destructive floods have generally come from the Ohio. This was the case with the great floods of 1882, 1883, 1884, and 1897; and these floods culminated in February or March (E, 40-45, and Starling, 29 and 41). Of the total amount of water passing Cairo during these floods the Ohio contributed 69 per cent in 1882, 70 per cent in 1883, 85 per cent in 1884, and 76 per cent in 1897.

This I read from Mr. Starling's report. I read also from a bulletin of the Weather Bureau bearing on this subject:

> In Bulletin E (p. 46) the "Cause of the Mississippi floods" is thus summarized:
> "It is, of course, conceivable that a flood should occur in the Lower Mississippi from heavy precipitation over any of the great contributary basins. In these floods of the past quarter century we do not, however, find the western tributaries playing an important part. The great source of floods is the Ohio Basin, with its steep slopes from the crest of the Alleghenies, upon which falls the heaviest rains of spring at a time when the normal rise of the Lower Mississippi brings the river almost to the danger line from Cairo to the Gulf."

I want to read that again, and to attract to it the attention of Senators who are interested in the matter of floods on the Mississippi River:

> The great source of floods is the Ohio Basin, with its steep slopes from the crest of the Alleghenies, upon which falls the heaviest rains of spring at a time when the normal rise of the Lower Mississippi brings the river almost to the danger line from Cairo to the Gulf. In the greatest floods we also find that heavy rainfall over the great swamp region that extends along the Mississippi from the mouth of the Ohio to the Gulf of Mexico is an important factor.

We also looked into the question of the destruction of forests. It is argued here that the destruction of forests has a tendency to diminish rainfall. I read from the report of the committee the following:

> Nothing in the evidence or other data obtained by your committee discloses the fact that the destruction of timber at or near the headwaters of these river systems tends to cause or promote the floods referred to.

It is contended that the destruction of the timber at the headwaters of these streams tends to increase floods, and therefore ought to be conserved. That is not true.

> It was shown that where timber is cut down for purposes other than cultivation the underbrush remains and grows more luxuriant than ever, and such underbrush serves to retard rather than hasten the movement of water on the slopes and hillsides; and where timber is cut down for purposes of clearing and cultivation the plowed area becomes an enlarged absorbent of surface moisture. It is a generally accepted opinion that the destruction of timber tends rather to diminish than to increase the rainfall.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, in view of the criticism made upon the first proviso of section 7 on page 4 I offer the following amendment: Insert in line 16, page 4, after the word "regulations," the following:

As to classification of timber, appraisement, advertisement, and general terms and conditions.

Mr. BURTON. I accept the amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. I also offer the following amendment: After the word "Agriculture," in line 17, insert "and be approved by the President."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALDRICH in the chair). The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 16, section 7, after the words "rules and regulations," it is proposed to insert:

As to classification of timber, appraisement, advertisement, and general terms and conditions.

And page 4, line 17, after the word "Agriculture," it is proproposed to insert:

And be approved by the President.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, this is a very picturesque and beautiful proposition. It grows on me. I did not realize, until I tapped the Senator from Kansas for information as to wood and water, how magnificent, absolutely illimitable it is. After the discussion I confess, although I think it is my own misfortune, that I am at a loss to understand precisely upon what ground of public policy the enactment of this bill is intended to be urged.

The Senator from Kansas says it is a water bill, a twin brother or a twin sister—which was it?—a twin brother, I believe——

Mr. BURTON. There are no sexes in nature.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, there are.

Mr. SPOONER. It is a twin brother of the irrigation bill, and he might have added, a step-brother of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. BURTON. No; it is no kin to that whatever.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, yes; it is a good deal of kin to it. The object of it is to control the rainfall and to prevent floods. We have had many disastrous floods, and we have had provision in river and harbor bills to prevent floods, and have spent a vast amount of money in that way in river and harbor acts.

The Senator outlines a magnificent scheme, and he states that the real object of the bill is to control the rainfall, and he prophesied, with safety and accuracy, that the time will come, probably not very far distant, when, with Yankee ingenuity and our great wealth, we will be able to control generally throughout the country the rainfall. I presume that is a desirable thing to accomplish, and if we can not accomplish it in any other way I think probably it will become necessary to accomplish it by legislation.

But what has troubled me about this bill, so far as I am troubled about it, is that this is only a beginning, an experiment in this scheme of controlling the rainfall, suggested by the Senator from Kansas. Where will it stop? Of course, we have forest reserves in various parts of the United States for the purpose of conserving the water supply. They are constituted, however, of lands owned by the United States. This is a proposition to buy 4,000,000 acres of land, 24 per cent of the area of which, as I read the report, is already under cultivation. The proposition in this bill is that where a man's farm is needed in order to accomplish the purposes of this bill——

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is mistaken in the application of the statement in the report about 24 per cent. It does not mean that 24 per cent of the land it is proposed to buy is in cultivation, but that 24 per cent of the lands in that vicinity, including the valley lands, are. The valley lands are nearly all cleared, and it is not proposed to buy them.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator kindly inform me, if he is able to do so, what proportion of the area which it is proposed to buy is under cultivation?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think there is any accurate data.

Mr. SPOONER. It has not been ascertained?

Mr. SIMMONS. It has not been ascertained. They have just begun to clear the mountain sides.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, I have been troubled to satisfy myself as to whether or not this land is contiguous. It is in four States.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it contiguous in area or is it detached?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think it is contiguous in the sense that every tract touches, but it is a continuous range of mountains.

Mr. SPOONER. We can make it contiguous by condemning the land necessary for that purpose.

Mr. SIMMONS. By condemning or buying it.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would take more than 4,000,000 acres.

Mr. SPOONER. Perhaps.

Mr. SIMMONS. The bill is limited to 4,000,000 acres. There is more in the general area of country, but the bill is limited in its purchase to 4,000,000 acres.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course this is the first proposition, so far as I know, to purchase 4,000,000 acres, or any number of million of acres of land in private ownership for the purpose of establishing a Government forest reserve.

Mr. BURTON. No.

Mr. SPOONER. Where?

Mr. BURTON. In the Blackfoot purchase.

Mr. SPOONER. There we bought the land and included it with other Government land in a forest reserve. That was an ordinary matter, because it was simply the extinguishment of the Indian possessory title, and of course the Government owned the fee to the land. The Senator from Nevada confirms me in the statement that in that case the Government owned the fee, and all that the Government did was to extinguish the possessory title of the Indians.

Mr. BURTON. I will say, if the Senator will allow me just a word here by way of interruption——

Mr. SPOONER. Of course.

Mr. BURTON. This is substantially a new policy, if that is the point the Senator is making.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the statement I made.

Mr. BURTON. There is one exception—the one I referred to. I do not know that it could be cited either as a precedent. This proposition would be the first purchase of this kind to be made.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, what I want the Senator to tell me——

Mr. BURTON. But I will suggest that there is no difference between the purchase of land, if it was a public benefit, and taking the public domain and turning that into a forest reserve. This Appalachian forest reserve would be within twenty-four hours' ride of 50,000,000 people. There are a great many other reasons which might be stated why the reserve should be established.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know, but I rather fancy the people would think there was some distinction between utilizing land which belongs to the people for the benefit of sections of country and buying land owned by individuals to the extent of costing ten or twelve or perhaps fifteen million dollars and paying for it out of money raised by taxation. They might not see any distinction; but if we are to engage in this monumental project of controlling the rainfall of the United States we must be prepared to indulge in it wherever the rainfall is such as to require in the public interest that this remedy shall be applied. Of course it is the point of beginning, but where will be the point of ending? If this policy is to be inaugurated in one part of the country and the sentiment for it shall develop in another, upon what principle will it be denied in the other?

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I do not——

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to give the Senator a vote on his bill, and if he will pardon me I want to call attention to one or two other things. The description of this park is interesting. I say park, for that is what it is to be—a great national park:

It extends from the southern part of Virginia and West Virginia to the northern part of Alabama and Georgia; it comprises the greatest mountain masses east of the Rockies, the finest scenery, the richest forests, the mightiest rivers, and the greatest variety of geologic formations from the Archæan to the late Cambrian.

Well, perhaps all that ought not to be in private ownership. If the Government ought to own it there, however, why ought not the Government to own such unique geologic phases elsewhere?

But the district is valuable not alone to lumberman, farmer, and scientist. The scenery about the falls, cascades, and gorges is beautiful beyond description.

I do not know who drew this. I suppose it was drawn by the Senator from Kansas. Rhetorically it is as beautiful as the falls, cascades, and gorges to which it refers.

The view from the greater elevations of the Blue Ridge and Great Smoky Mountains can rarely be equaled.

That is a reason, I suppose, why the Government should make this purchase. But there are other cascades in the country and other mountains and other marvelous vistas, the scenery of which even the Senator from Kansas could not adequately describe, and which no artist who ever lived could picture. Why not buy them and have the Government own them?

If this is to be a self-supporting arrangement there is no provision in this bill for charging anything for a view of this gorgeous panorama. That is an omission which ought to be supplied.

In the course of a day's excursion from the foot to the summit of Mount Mitchell one may pass in retrogression through all the seasons, from late summer to early spring. In accessibility and natural charm it is full of attraction for the health and pleasure seeker.

But there is one other thing; I will hastily notice it, and I shall take only three minutes.

Not the smallest of the resources of this Southern Appalachian country is its water power.

Now, that is visible. That is not mere beauty.

At various points on its numerous and important streams, between their sources and the head of navigation, are falls and rapids which furnish valuable power for the increasing manufactures of that region. Estimates made by the Geological Survey during the last three years place the available power at 1,000,000 horsepower.

I suppose probably this water power is on this reservation. I infer from this report that all that is here referred to is on the reservation. There is no provision in the bill for utilizing it in the interests of the Government. There is no power given, as far as I can see, to the Secretary of Agriculture to lease it. There is no authority given to dispose of tracts of land around the water power in order that mills may be erected and that villages may be established.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator is mistaken. The water power would not be on the reservation.

Mr. SPOONER. None of it?

Mr. BURTON. The water power would be below. This is on the slope of the mountains.

Mr. SPOONER. I think in this vast tract of territory there must be a great deal of water power. That ought to be utilized. If this is to be self-supporting there ought to be some authority given the Secretary of Agriculture perhaps to improve it. He is to do some other things here which are akin to that and he should be permitted to rent it.

I yield to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, this discussion seems to have proceeded with the definite purpose to occupy the time until 2 o'clock so as to prevent the Senate from proceeding with the consideration of the motion submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], and the disposition now to clear the way for a vote on this bill does not appeal to my favor very much, because the bill is, in my opinion, a bad one.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will recognize that the friends of the bill have had no such purpose and have not been responsible for the consumption of time.

Mr. BAILEY. That is true. I think the bill is a bad one, and I think there will be no end to the policy which it will inaugurate. The Government will buy land that has trees to preserve the forest, and next it will buy land that has no trees in order to make a forest. But while I think it is a bad bill, I do not intend to interfere with a vote on it, and I shall be content to vote against this and all such legislation.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to say to the Senator from Texas that, as far as I am concerned, I looked at the clock and yielded because my friend from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] had appealed to me not to prevent a vote on the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I want distinctly to disavow any intention to impute that kind of a purpose to the Senator from Wisconsin. I am sure he intended simply to limit his remarks so that we could get a vote, and not for an ulterior purpose.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment of the committee pending which should be disposed of first, unless the amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee can be received by unanimous consent.

Mr. BATE. Never mind; I will wait.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 7, line 10, after the word "reserve," strike out the words "and to," and insert:

And violations of such rules and regulations shall be punished as provided by law for other forest reserves; and he may

So as to read:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby empowered and directed to make such rules and regulations and establish such service as he may deem necessary for the care, protection, control, and use of such forest reserve, and violations of such rules and regulations shall be punished as provided by law for other forest reserves; and he may sell such wood, timber, and other products as may be removed without injury to the forest.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATE. I offer the following amendment as an additional section, to come in at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. —. This act shall not take effect until the Secretary of Agriculture has reported to Congress with proper plats of each reservation, showing metes and bounds, altitude of mountains, sources and courses of rivers and streams, areas cultivated and uncultivated, acreage, and such features of the country which will properly define and exhibit its character. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to use so much of the money appropriated by this act as may be necessary to make and complete said survey and plat. The act shall take effect after the approval by Congress of said survey and plat.

Mr. BURTON. I accept the amendment.

Mr. BATE. I did not understand the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas accepts the amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I wish to say a word, but not to make a speech, as we are limited in considering this bill to the morning hour, which has nearly expired. I think it proper, however, to say something.

I want to state that while this bill does not meet my approval altogether, neither in form nor substance, yet it has good in it, for its professed object to relieve flood tides and low water in navigable rivers is certainly commendable. It is undeniable that there is an advantage in having forest reserves. How to get them is embarrassing. I expect to vote for this bill, although not free in my judgment from grave objections. I intend to do so through the respect and confidence I bear to the legislature of Tennessee, which at its recent session requested my colleague and myself to do so.

It, however, hedges in the proposition with an enactment ceding to the United States on conditions certain lands extending 20 miles along the North Carolina line, retaining jurisdiction for certain purposes, notwithstanding its cession to the General Government. This conflict of jurisdiction will, I fear, generate untold trouble, and I want somehow to avoid it. Besides, Mr. President, I must confess to a sentiment that does not accord with the idea of having the form of the grand old State, every inch of which is historic and dear to me, mutilated by cutting off a large share and ceding it to the Federal Government. I shall, however, as I said, vote for the bill in deference to the wish of the legislature as expressed by resolution and enactment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGREEMENT WITH CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13172) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. STEWART. The committee have come to the conclusion that section 32 ought to be amended in some respects, particularly so as to allow those who have judgments against them to have a hearing, and I propose to have section 32 stricken out. That matter, and also the amendment of the Senator from Texas, can be considered by the conference committee, and the section can be perfected there. If the Senator from Texas will consent to this course, I move that section 32 be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Texas is the amendment in order.

Mr. STEWART. I know it is in order. I ask his consent. My motion can only be made with his consent.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has the bill been read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill has not been completed. The Senate has been acting on amendments as the bill was being read.

Mr. ALDRICH. Under an agreement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the agreement.

Mr. STEWART. I move to strike out section 32 with the consent of the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas withdraw his amendment?

Mr. BAILEY. That is not altogether satisfactory, but I think perhaps under all the circumstances it is the best that can be done. The committee itself recognizes the necessity and propriety of one amendment which I suggested. I think probably that is the better course, and I will withdraw the amendment which I offered and consent to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment to strike out all of section 32, on page 19. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, the withdrawal of his amendment by the Senator from Texas obviates the necessity of my making any remarks upon that amendment, as I had contemplated doing; but I shall take advantage of this moment to say that I find on a perusal of the RECORD that I misunderstood yesterday what the Senator from Texas said in reply to a question which I asked, and it was that misunderstanding which led me to move an executive session. I thought that perhaps justice to that Senator required that I should make this statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. The Senate passed over several amendments temporarily. I now offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, which supplies the defect which was intended to be remedied in what we passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 4, after the word "land," strike out "office" and insert "offices;" so as to read:

And after the expiration of ninety days following the opening of such land offices any such applicant may make allegation, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 21, after the words "appear at," strike out "the" and insert "one of said."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The word "office," in the next line, ought to be "offices."

Mr. STEWART. It is all to be perfected.

The SECRETARY. In the same line, after the word "land," strike out "office" and insert "offices;" so as to read:

And the person so alleged to be holding land contrary to law shall be allowed thirty days from the date of the service of said notice in which to appear at one of said land offices.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, line 17, after the word "of," strike out "the" and insert "said."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The word "office" ought to be plural in the sentence.

The SECRETARY. In the same line, after the word "land," strike out "office" and insert "offices;" so as to read:

If any citizen or freedman of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations shall not have selected his allotment within twelve months after the date of the opening of said land offices in said nations, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at section 33, page 19, line 24, and read to line 8, on page 23.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if there would be any objection on his part on page 23, line 4, after the word "delinquents," to striking out these words:

And such intermarried white persons as may have married recognized citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in accordance with the tribal laws, customs, and usages on or before the date of the final ratification of this agreement.

I do not know that I want to make a serious point upon it, yet it seems to me rather late for this Commission——

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will move that amendment we could consider it in conference. I think that is very questionable myself.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It seems to me rather late for this Commission now to have renewed power to take in the intermarried white persons. I do not know but that it is all right, yet I should like to strike out those words so that it would go into conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves an amendment which will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 34, on page 23, line 4, after the word "delinquents," strike out—and such intermarried white persons as may have married recognized citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations in accordance with the tribal laws, customs, and usages on or before the date of the final ratification of this agreement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 19, on page 27.

Mr. STEWART. I move that section 41 be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada offers an amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let us hear what it is.

Mr. STEWART. It relates to the Mississippi Choctaws.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is to strike out, beginning in line 20, on page 27, down to the end of line 10, on page 29.

Mr. MONEY. One moment, Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the words proposed to be stricken out be first read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The SECRETARY. Beginning in line 20, on page 27, it is proposed to strike out:

MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAWS.

41. All persons duly identified by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the provisions of section 21 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898 (30 Stats., 495), as Mississippi Choctaws entitled to benefits under article 14 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation concluded September 27, 1830, may, at any time within six months after the date of their identification as Mississippi Choctaws by the said Commission, make bona fide settlement within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, and upon proof of such settlement to such Commission within one year after the date of their said identification as Mississippi Choctaws shall be enrolled by such Commission as Mississippi Choctaws entitled to allotment as herein provided for citizens of the tribes, subject to the special provisions herein provided as to Mississippi Choctaws, and said enrollment shall be final when approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The application of no person for identification as a Mississippi Choctaw shall be received by said Commission after six months subsequent to the date of the final ratification of this agreement and in the disposition of such applications all full-blood Choctaw Indians and the descendants of any person who received a patent to land under the said fourteenth article of the said treaty of 1830 who had not moved to and made bona fide settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country prior to June 28, 1898, shall be deemed to be Mississippi Choctaws, entitled to benefits under article 14 of the said treaty of September 27, 1830, and to identification as such by said Commission, but this direction or provision shall be deemed to be only a rule of evidence and shall not be invoked by or operate to the advantage of any applicant who is not of the full blood, or who is not the descendant of a person who received a patent to land under said treaty. And the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expenses of removal to the Indian Territory of full-blood Mississippi Choctaws and other Mississippi Choctaws duly identified under the provisions of this agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I object to this amendment. This bill came from the House of Representatives, was fully considered by our Committee on Indian Affairs, and reported without amendment. I do not see any good reason, and none has yet been stated, why this section should be stricken out, and there is a good deal to be said why it should remain as part of this bill.

Mr. STEWART. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. It is intended that it shall remain substantially as it is, although there are manifestly little items that will take some time to perfect, and it will be perfected in conference. The last clause appropriating $15,000 the Senate committee is opposed to; the other part of the section needs a good many verbal amendments, and it will take some time to make them.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, that being the case, as stated by the chairman of the committee, I suggest to him, with great respect, that we simply pass over this section or have it recommitted; but I do not like to have the entire section stricken out of the bill, for that would mean a permanent settlement.

Mr. STEWART. No, it would not.

Mr. MONEY. It means very much the same thing; and I think it will answer the purpose just as well if we pass over the section now.

Mr. STEWART. No; I want to pass the bill.

Mr. MONEY. I suggest that we pass over the section and let the committee bring in any amendment they please, or the chairman might suggest such amendments as he deems necessary. I am distinctly opposed to striking out the appropriation of $15,000. I say the Mississippi Choctaws who are of full blood are as much entitled to allotments of land as any Choctaw who is residing with the tribe to-day. So far as that is concerned, Mr. President, if there is dispute over the legal proposition of the fourteenth article of the agreement, I believe that properly, under the law, the Mississippi Choctaws would have a right to share in the allotments, but as a matter of equity they certainly have, and the committee of the House has wisely provided for it. Those people reside in my State in considerable numbers, and they ought to be allotted lands, as they are identified as Choctaws by the Dawes Commission, under the rules and safeguards which that Commission and this bill itself provide.

I should be very glad if the Senator would allow this section to be passed over for the present and not have it stricken out.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me to ask him what is the purpose of passing over this section? This bill will have to be disposed of in conference. There must be a conference between the House committee and the Senate committee. There are differences of opinion as to what should be in this section. I for one believe that there should be some amendment put in so as to define more clearly what the House evidently intended by this provision, but there is some question about the exact language that ought to be used. I believe justice can be reached and the purpose of both Houses can be better ascertained by the conference committee disposing of the matter than for us to undertake to settle it here and then have to settle it again with the House conferees. The purpose is to leave the whole matter in conference, to be settled between the House conferees and the Senate conferees, and when the report of the conferees is made to the respective Houses, if the report is not satisfactory, neither House need accept it.

Mr. MONEY. But that does not relieve me at all. While I admit there is something in the idea suggested by the Senator from Arkansas, that is no reason for striking out the whole section. It may be necessary to make some corrections, and if there are amendments to be made, why not make them now, or, as I said, pass over this section and when we finish the reading of the bill come back to it? But I do not like the idea of striking out the entire section.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to pass over the entire section. We will be through with the reading of the bill in a few minutes, and we can take up this section in fifteen minutes and dispose of it.

There is one amendment I want to propose to this bill, and which I doubt whether the Senate committee itself is as competent to determine as two committees would be. I should like to insert in line 16, after the word "full-blood," the word "Mississippi;" so as to read: "all full-blood Mississippi Choctaw Indians;" then in the next line I should like to strike out the word "person" and insert "Mississippi Choctaw Indian, whether of full or mixed blood;" and then I should like, in line 2, on page 29, after the word "not," to insert the words "a Mississippi Choctaw."

Mr. MONEY. Well, Mr. President, I have no objection to these amendments, because they are put in simply out of abundant caution. The whole title of the section is "Mississippi Choctaws;" and when that term is mentioned, it must refer, under the title of the section, to the Mississippi Choctaws; but if, in the experience of the Senator from Arkansas, he thinks it necessary, out of abundant caution, to insert the words he proposes, I have no objection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If it will be any gratification to the Senator from Mississippi, I suggest that the Senate pass over the section, finish the reading of the bill, and this question can be then taken up.

Mr. MONEY. Very well; that is satisfactory to me, if it be deemed necessary.

Mr. BERRY. I think the Senator from Mississippi will not object to the amendments proposed by my colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas].

Mr. MONEY. I am perfectly willing, I say, to accept them.

Mr. BERRY. Then why not make them now?

Mr. MONEY. Very well; make them now.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that he move his amendments now.

Mr. MONEY. Certainly; I was not objecting to the consideration of the amendments now, but I do not want the entire section stricken out.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. MONEY. I do.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move, in line 16, on page 28, after the word "full-blood," to insert the word "Mississippi;" so as to read: "All full-blood Mississippi Choctaw Indians."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. At the beginning of line 17, on the same page, I move to strike out the word "person" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "Mississippi Choctaw Indians, whether of full or mixed blood."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Where does that come in?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. At the beginning of line 17, on page 28, to strike out the word "person" and insert "Mississippi Choctaw Indians, whether of full or mixed blood."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to make an inquiry as to the effect of that amendment. Does the Senator understand, that amendment being made and this provision being passed, that any Mississippi Choctaw Indian who receives a patent to land is to be enrolled merely on that evidence?

Mr. MONEY. Those who are enrolled can get the benefit of that, I will say to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator will read the remainder of the section and will allow me to offer another amendment that I want to make below, he will see just what the effect of it will be.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. All right. Will the descendant of a Choctaw Indian, in order to receive a patent for land, have to remove to the Indian Territory or will he not? That is the question.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator will look at the language toward the close of the section, he will find these words:

> But this direction or provision shall be deemed to be only a rule of evidence and shall not be invoked by or operate to the advantage of any applicant who is not of the full blood or who is not the descendant of a person who received a patent to land under said treaty.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I see that; but still that does not settle the question as to whether such person will have to remove, as other persons have to do, to this Territory to get the benefit of it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no question of that, but I want to amend further. On page 29, line 2, after the word "not," I move to insert the words "a Mississippi Choctaw."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 1, after the word "not," it is proposed to insert "a Mississippi Choctaw."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 3, on the same page, before the word "who," I move to strike out the word "person" and insert the words "Mississippi Choctaw."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 3, before the word "who," it is proposed to strike out the word "person" and insert "Mississippi Choctaw."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to add to the insertion these words: "or who is otherwise barred from the right of citizenship in the Choctaw Nation."

Mr. MONEY. What connection has that?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is on page 26, line 3, to strike out the word "person" and insert "Mississippi Choctaw, or who is otherwise barred from the right of citizenship in the Choctaw Nation."

Mr. MONEY. Not by this legislation?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No, otherwise; by the law and by the facts as they now stand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 3, before the word "who," it is proposed to strike out the word "person" and insert "Mississippi Choctaw, or who is otherwise barred from the right of citizenship in the Choctaw Nation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I believe that those words ought to come in after the word "treaty," in line 4. I think I have put them in the wrong place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the vote by which the last amendment was agreed to will be regarded as reconsidered, and the amendment as now proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, in line 3, before the word "who," it is proposed to strike out "person" and insert "Mississippi Choctaw."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 4, after the word "treaty," it is proposed to insert "or who is otherwise barred from the right of citizenship in the Choctaw Nation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to offer an amendment to strike out, in line 4, after the word "treaty," all of the remainder of the section down to and including line 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 4, after the word "treaty," it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. MONEY. Does the Senator from Nevada desire to discuss that amendment?

Mr. STEWART. I do not care about discussing it. I want it adopted. Let the Secretary read the amendment, and then I shall make a remark about it.

Mr. MONEY. Very well; let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "treaty," on page 29, line 4, it is proposed to strike out:

> And the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expenses of removal to the Indian Territory of full-blood Mississippi Choctaws and other Mississippi Choctaws duly identified under the provisions of this agreement.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, it is quite improper, I think, for the Government to expend money to carry more of the Choctaws from Mississippi to the Indian Territory. If they could be identified as Choctaws and be given an opportunity to go there and share in the land, which is very valuable now, the Indians would very seriously object to, and they are objecting, seriously objecting, to it now. I do not think we ought to appropriate this money for that purpose. I think the language ought to be stricken out. The Indians who are in the Indian Territory are very much opposed to bringing more there, allowing them to share in their lands, which they have occupied for a hundred years, and divide them up. We have allowed a number to go in under certain conditions; but I do not think we should force the Mississippi Choctaws on the Indians in the Indian Territory by expending this $15,000.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, my information does not accord with that given the Senate by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]. My information is that the Choctaws who are now in tribal relations are very anxious for their brethren to join them.

That is my information, and I think I get it from reliable authority.

As to the sum to be appropriated, $15,000, the Senator says, it would be a great benefit to these people to go there and live and get this allotment of land. I could argue if necessary, and I think successfully, that they are entitled to do so under the law by the fourteenth section of the treaty. I shall not, however, touch upon that now. But upon the equities which this bill has afforded these Choctaws as a matter of fact the going to the Territory is a condition precedent to obtaining a bona fide residence. The Senator seems to think that in order to get the prize of allotment of land, the Indians must go there of their own motion and at their own expense. They are willing to go, but a great many of them are not able to do so. I speak now knowing what I am talking about. There may be some of these people who are perfectly able to take themselves there, but you will recollect when the treaty of Rabbit Creek was made and you removed the Choctaws to the West, they were removed at Government expense. The Government paid all the expenses of moving every Choctaw.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. It was optional with the Indians to go or not. They got land in Mississippi, and they were provided for under that same treaty. Congress was equally generous with those who remained in Mississippi and with those who went to the Territory. The Choctaws now in Mississippi elected to remain there.

Mr. MONEY. I understand that.

Mr. STEWART. They having agreed to remain in Mississippi and the others having gone to the Indian Territory and made their homes, it is going a good way to give them the privilege of having the United States pay their expenses for going there under such circumstances.

Mr. MONEY. That is exactly what the Senator said before; but nevertheless it remains that the first Choctaws, although they received a valuable consideration, as they esteemed it, for their lands in Mississippi, were transported at the expense of the United States Government; and the United States Government was willing to do that because it wanted that beautiful section of country in Alabama and Mississippi for white people to occupy. They were willing to do that. If it is necessary that they should go to the Indian Territory, I say they are not all of them people who have got money enough to move themselves and their effects and families there.

The amount proposed to be appropriated is a small sum of money to the United States, but it is a great deal to this handful of Indians; and we can afford, after what has been called a century of dishonor in dealing with the Indians, to do a piece of justice to these people; and we can afford to be more than just—we can afford to be generous to them. It is a matter that will be appreciated by them, and it would not be felt by the United States.

I think the committee properly reported this bill, and I hope the Senate will not concur in the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

In regard to the Choctaws of Mississippi, I will say that they are not a strong race of people. They are improvident. They drew their sections of land, and those who chose to remain there got possession of the land. Senators know that in every Indian treaty we have inserted a provision which makes Indian lands inalienable. Everyone knows that that provision is inserted because of the improvidence of the Indians and because the Government wishes to guard against their disposing of their lands, and others getting possession of their estates. That provision was not applied to the Choctaws in Mississippi. So they were enabled to alienate their lands, and most of them have alienated their lands. The result is that this improvident race are, although in the midst of civilization, still unable to take care of themselves from a business point of view; and they want to go to their brethren in the Indian Territory and receive their allotment of land there, which, in my opinion, they are entitled to receive. I believe that to be nothing more than simple justice; certainly not more than generosity; and we can well afford to give them the sum now named, not exceeding $15,000.

I hope the Senator from Nevada will withdraw his amendment and let the provision in the bill stand as it was originally written. It is nothing but justice to the Mississippi Choctaws. I am speaking of a very poor people, a mere remnant of a vanishing race, who once owned our country. I hope, if the Senator from Nevada insists upon his amendment, that the Senate will not agree to it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, the facts about these Mississippi Choctaws are few and very simple, and I will undertake to state to the Senate the case as I understand it.

When the Government made an agreement with the Choctaw Nation originally to remove them from Mississippi to the Indian country, the agreement was made that all those Indians who chose to stay in Mississippi should reserve their land in Mississippi, and take their part in the national domain in Mississippi and live there, if they chose to do so.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Six hundred and forty acres apiece.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Six hundred and forty acres of land to everyone—man, woman, and child. This land was taken by the Indians and used by them, and they remain still in Mississippi. The other Indians went West and took their patrimony in the West. Now, for some years past——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator pardon me for a moment?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not remember whether, under the terms of the arrangement, that ended the tribal relation or the interest of the Mississippi Indians in the tribal property.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly it did. These people made their homes in Mississippi and separated from the other Indians, and they have never, from then until now, been considered a part of the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. SPOONER. That was by their own volition?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. By their own act.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It may have been stated during the course of the discussion, but, if so, it has escaped my attention, and I should like to know, if the Senator can inform me, about how many Mississippi Choctaws there are at present?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not remember exactly. I believe about 2,000.

Mr. MONEY. Do you mean in Mississippi?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I was asking about the number of Mississippi Choctaws at present.

Mr. MONEY. In Mississippi?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes.

Mr. MONEY. One thousand nine hundred.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. One thousand nine hundred?

Mr. MONEY. About 1,900.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There are 1,900 already identified.

Mr. MONEY. There are about 1,900, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. How many would avail themselves of this provision for participating in the Indian lands?

Mr. MONEY. That is impossible to answer. You can not tell. They have intermarried, and the tribal relationship there——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator had allowed me to finish the sentence I was on, I think he would have seen something of the force of this.

For years there has been a law among the Choctaws that any Mississippi Choctaw who chose to come from Mississippi to the Choctaw Nation, and who could show that he was a Choctaw, would be accepted as a Choctaw and become a citizen of the nation, entitled to all of the rights there. They have not seen fit to avail themselves of this advantage. A few have gone, but not many; but there has been no denial under the Choctaw laws of the right of the Mississippi Choctaws to do this if they chose.

Now, since the proposition has come for dividing the Territory, one proposition and another have been made that the Mississippi Choctaws should be allowed to take their share of these Indian lands. The Choctaws have not been willing to give up a part of their land to those who have already received their full share of the nation's patrimony, and allow them to remain in Mississippi and hold their lands in the Territory for speculative purposes. The Choctaws are willing to let the Mississippi Choctaws come and live among them, and they have voluntarily provided in this agreement we make with the nation that the Mississippi Choctaws who are bona fide Mississippi Choctaws may go to the Choctaw Nation and have equal rights with the balance when they do so.

This is a proposition to take $15,000 out of the Treasury to induce these people, or those who choose to go, to leave Mississippi and go where they have had the right to go for years and where they had not chosen to go. Those willing to go have gone years ago. There may be some who, if accommodations to remove are provided, would be willing to go and stay long enough to take title or get land in their possession. It does seem to me that it is not right for the Government of the United States to undertake to move over to the Choctaw country those who have refused to go, just simply for the purpose of taking land that belongs to those who have lived there always and to divide it amongst those who have never gone there at all. I do not think the provision is right, and I think the Senate ought to strike it out, according to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, it is quite true, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas, that when the tribe was moved to the West those who chose to remain were granted a section of land. Some of them availed themselves of that privilege and selected the land. That is quite true. But it is not exactly true that they thereby got all they were entitled to. As a matter of fact, that section of land was compensation for their release of their share of the annuity and not their share of the country bought by the tribe in the West by the exchange of Mississippi territory. The consideration for their getting a section of land was the agreement to make no claim to the annuity to the Choctaws under the agreement of 1832. These people still have, in my opinion, a legal right and certainly an equitable right to their share of this land.

The Senator says there has been a law all the time in the Choctaw Nation that any of the Mississippi Choctaws, a Choctaw or mixed blood, who went into the Choctaw Nation could get citizenship. That is quite true. But the Mississippi Choctaws did not choose to go there when there was no private property. They did not choose to go there until there was an allotment ordered, and when that was ordered they were willing to go there and they are desirous of doing so.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I was about to ask the Senator a question to which he has just addressed himself, and that was as to whether the people who have the equitable right to the public domain, as the Senator stated a moment go, have asserted it prior to the present?

Mr. MONEY. Have they asserted their right?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONEY. The only way they could assert it was by removing to the Choctaw Nation and taking citizenship under the tribal relation while the land was held in common.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Precisely.

Mr. MONEY. The Mississippi Choctaws were not willing to become members of the Choctaw tribe so long as the lands were held in common, but now, when the Government has provided, against the will of the Choctaws in the first instance, by a gentle sort of education and compulsion, for an allotment of the lands they are willing to go there. If they do not choose to go, there will be no money expended. It will go back into the Treasury. It is only intended to apply to those who now take the choice of becoming Choctaw citizens upon the allotment of land to them in severalty, and it is made a condition here that they shall remain there for three years in continual residence in order to perfect their title to the land. Otherwise the title is not made good to them.

So there is no question about the right of these people to go, and there is no question about their right to that land, in my mind, at least. It has been so treated by the Commission; it has been so treated by the two committees, and the only question left to determine is whether we will do for this remnant of the Choctaws in Mississippi what we did for the whole tribe in 1832 and 1834, and that is to remove them at Government expense. The Government then was very glad to have them go at its expense. There is not the peculiar consideration now—to open up their lands to white people—which there was at that time. But, nevertheless, it is an act of justice, at least of generosity, which we can very well afford. It is only $15,000, and we may not in its application expend half that sum. It will depend entirely upon the number of Choctaws who are willing to go, and my impression is they will nearly all go. That is the information I get continually. I have had letter upon letter for two or three years about this matter, and I think I am pretty well informed as to the wishes and intentions of the Choctaws in my State. I believe they will go, and they ought to be carried there, as I believe, at the public expense.

I think some of them are able to go without assistance, on their own means. But there are others, and a great many of them, who, for lack of means, I believe, can not go there to avail themselves of this invitation of the Government and of the Choctaw Nation to receive part of the lands in severalty. It is a mistake to assume that this assignment of land, when they did not want to move from their old habitation, was given as sufficient remuneration and that they lost thereby their share of land in the nation. It was simply to compensate them for the loss of the annuity which it was agreed they should not claim so long as they remained in Mississippi.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I understood the Senator to say that some of the Mississippi Choctaws are able financially to go there?

Mr. MONEY. I think they are.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. This bill as it is reported provides for paying the expenses of any who desire to go, whether they are able to pay their own expenses or whether they are not. Is that quite equitable and fair?

Mr. MONEY. That is the way it stands. It is impossible for me or for any other man to say how many, if any, are able to carry themselves there. I believe there are some, but I do not think there are a great many. As I said a while ago, as everybody knows, this is an improvident race, and the Government is continually recognizing that improvidence by placing a disqualification for the alienation of their land in every treaty and statute making any division or partition of land among them.

If anybody wants to correct that section so as to provide that those who are able to carry themselves shall do so (I do not know who will decide that question if it is put in) and if it could be determined properly, I would be perfectly willing to have it inserted. I do not want the Government to pay for those who can carry themselves, although it did it when it removed the whole tribe, and some of the people were rich. Some of them owned a great many negroes. The great chief of the Choctaws owned over 600 slaves and had a palace, I may call it, fitted up with the finest things that could be got in Paris.

Mr. STEWART. The Government was very liberal then.

Mr. MONEY. And he stayed at home. He did not go with his tribe, although a great chief.

But, Mr. President, I do not want to consume the time of the Senate debating a small proposition like this. Therefore I will not say anything more about it.

Mr. STEWART. Let us have a vote.

Mr. MONEY. But I hope the Senate will let the provision remain in the bill.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate with any extended discussion. It seems to me it would be impossible for anyone to urge any substantial equity in favor of a Mississippi Choctaw who has remained in his native State. The Government treated all the Choctaws exactly alike. It extended to all of them on equal terms the opportunity of moving west of the Mississippi, the Government defraying the expenses of such removal. It offered to the Choctaws who desired to remain in Mississippi an alternative proposition—640 acres of land in the State where they were. Now, that option was exercised. Those people who chose to remain in Mississippi took the alternative proposition. Why should they have another option? Why should they call on the Government to go and urge them, after they have taken their land in Mississippi, to go and share the patrimony of their brothers across the Mississippi? I have never been able to see any reason that could be urged in favor of the proposition.

It is true, as stated by the Senator from Mississippi, that the Choctaws in their new home have always been glad and willing to welcome to their numbers any of their brethren from Mississippi. That has been understood all the time, and they have been trying to induce some of them to come, but the Choctaws in Mississippi seem to prefer to retain their lands there, and have never moved.

The thing I am most concerned about is not the particular niceties of the equities. It is the practical effect that is going to be produced upon this treaty. As I took occasion to say yesterday, it is a matter of great importance to the Government that this particular treaty should be ratified. I have taken pains to find out from the representatives of the Choctaw Nation who are here what would be the effect upon the fate of this treaty if we left in this clause providing the $15,000 bonus, and they tell me that it would probably defeat the treaty; that the Choctaws look upon it in this way: That the $15,000 inducement being held out to the Mississippi Choctaws will induce a lot of those people to come for the sole purpose of perfecting a title, selling out the land or disposing of it, and getting away. They will come, in other words, without any intention to become permanent members of the Choctaw tribe. That is their fear, and that fear will operate against the ratification of this treaty.

I should feel great regret if this clause should remain in, because I think the fate of the treaty might hinge upon it. On that account I hope the Senate will sustain the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] alluded to the fact that when the removal of the Choctaws took place, way back in 1830 to 1832 or 1833, there was a provision in the treaty by which the Government paid the expenses of the removal, But that only applied to those Indians who chose to move. There is nothing in the treaty which provided for the removal of the Choctaw Indians who did not at that time wish to remove. Remaining behind, they were given 640 acres of land to the head of a family and a quarter of a section to each child, and varying amounts, owing to the age of the children. They got that; they got it in fee simple, and that was understood at that time to be all they were to have.

It seems to me it is not quite fair, Mr. President, although perhaps it is within the strict language of the treaty, for the persons who stayed behind, or the descendants of those who stayed behind—the persons who received the land being all dead now—to go there and share in the land belonging to the Indians who removed originally to the Territory and whose descendants have lived in the Indian Territory up to this time.

Now, what will be the effect? The ancestors of the persons who are talking about removing now stayed in Mississippi, stayed behind, elected to stay behind, got their 640 acres of land for staying behind, and have never been to the Indian Territory. They have shown no disposition to go to the Indian Territory. They have been perfectly contented to stay away from the Indian Territory and from the tribe, but when the land is to be divided up, and when they will get a portion of it if they go to the Territory and the land is divided, worth $4,000 to each member of the family, of course there is a great disposition to go to the Indian Territory.

There have been a great many schemes for removing them. There have been contracts made with them, or some of them, to remove them there and to subsist them there, upon an agreement that they should part with some of their land as compensation; but they have not gone under those contracts. There was that scheme, and there have been various other schemes to get them to remove. But the point of it all is that the descendants of the persons who stayed in Mississippi, choosing to stay there, and taking their lands there, now recognize that they may, if they remove to the Indian Territory, get a share in these lands. As I said before, that is worth a good deal of money to each one of them. It is estimated that it is worth $4,000 to each one of them, Now, why should the Government, under such circumstances, remove these people or pay for their removal? I can not see any reason at all for it.

Mr. STEWART. Besides, there is some doubt about the good faith involved in taking any of this land away from the Choctaws who did remove. It was granted to them; it has been held by them, and they have been treated as a tribe by themselves. The Mississippi Choctaws have been treated as Mississippi Choctaws. This agreement was made with the Choctaws who removed and not with the others. The grant was made to them, and it seems to me it is a matter of doubtful justice to take land away from them and give it to others who do not belong to the tribe.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, we seem to have here a very contradictory proposition. On one side it is contended that the Choctaws in the Territory are so anxious to have their brethren in Mississippi join them that they keep a law constantly standing inviting and admitting them to citizenship if they come there. Now, we have a claim that it would be a great injustice if these people went there.

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. That is not the way the Choctaws look at it, if the law expresses the will of the Choctaws, for they want the Mississippi Choctaws to come to the nation. The Mississippi Choctaws declined to go so long as the land was held in common. Now there is to be an allotment, the holding of land in severalty, and the Mississippi Choctaw, who has been constantly invited to go there, chooses to go.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. It is obvious that while the Choctaws were in a tribal relation they were very generous to extend this invitation to the Mississippi Choctaws to come and live with them, but the Mississippi Choctaws refused to do so for seventy or eighty years. If they go there now, the Choctaw Nation will understand that they are not coming there to be a part of the tribe, because the tribe is about to be dissolved. If they come, they come to get the land which has been given to the Choctaws in the Territory. They will object, and they do even now that we are providing for those who come voluntarily. They object seriously. I was talking with the representative about it. If you import the Mississippi Choctaws, giving them money to come, they will go with the money to get the land. But even now we are providing for those who will come voluntarily. This provides for their coming, if they come voluntarily. But the importation of the Mississippi Choctaws to this country the Choctaws in the Territory will regard as unjust, so their representative tells me. I think it would be an outrage. I think it would defeat the treaty. It would not be good faith to import them. You could gather them together and take them there and give them land, but you would not make brothers of the Choctaws unless they go there with the intention of settling.

Mr. MONEY. It amounts to this, according to the declaration of the Senator from Nevada: The Choctaws in the Territory are very anxious to have the Mississippi Choctaws come, if they come on their own account and pay their own expenses, but they object very much to the Mississippi Choctaws coming if some one else pays their expenses.

Mr. STEWART. They have been willing for the last seventy years to have them come, and the Mississippi Choctaws have refused to come. And if they go now it will be just to divide their heritage. If we allow them to go by this law, we divide the heritage. They can come now voluntarily, but the Choctaws in the Territory object to the Mississippi Choctaws being imported.

Mr. MONEY. As a matter of fact, the heritage belongs as much to the Eastern Choctaws as to the Western Choctaws. They have not lost their interest in it, and the Choctaw council itself fixed the system of enrollment, and the bill you have reported requires a residence of three years after they go there before they can perfect their title. As an evidence of good faith it is required that it shall be a bona fide residence; and certainly the people who have charge there can judge whether they are bona fide residents or residents simply for the acquisition of land to be sold. They can stay there. Nobody is going to transport them from there. It would cost them something to go back to Mississippi, and I venture to say that in a few years they will not have enough to go back to Mississippi. I doubt if the great bulk of the Choctaw Nation as soon as they have the right to alienate their lands will have any land. The white people will have it all.

The Choctaws did not beg anybody to take them West. They had to go West because the white people pressed upon their heels and demanded the territory which they inhabited, and you know the difficulties we had here in the arrangement of the treaty. General Jackson appointed a man as marshal to whom there was objection. Greenwood Le Flore visited General Jackson, who was then President, and objected to the marshal, claiming that he was not an honest man. General Jackson in the interview said: "I tell you he is an honest man." Le Flore answered: "I tell you he is a dishonest man." The President arose and said: "I, Andrew Jackson, President of the United States, tell you he is a good man." Le Flore drew himself up to his full height and said: "I, Greenwood Le Flore, great chief of the Choctaws, tell you he is a damned rascal," and the President took him by the hand—he had found a kindred spirit—and told him he should have a marshal who would suit.

The Choctaws who remained in Mississippi received 640 acres, and it was understood that it was in lieu of their share of the money paid year by year to the Choctaws, and it was not a relinquishment of their title to any land that belonged to the nation. They did not choose to go there and take land in common, but they had the option. Now, when you by the force of a law that we ourselves are passing——

Mr. STEWART. This bill allows them to go if they go voluntarily. The objection is to importing them.

Mr. MONEY. The fact that a man can not go from here to New York does not prove that he is not willing to go. I have been deprived of a trip around the world every summer because I did not have the money. I am not willing to go even to the Choctaw Nation, so far as that is concerned. But these people are willing, and a great many of them are unable to go.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me? He does not regard the Government of the United States as under obligations to give him money to travel around the world.

Mr. MONEY. Not at all. I hope the Senator does not have so poor an opinion of me or of my common sense. But people may be willing to go to a place if they have the means to get there. There is no proposition to take the Eastern Choctaws around the world, but only to their tribe. The Senator should not make that parallel.

Mr. STEWART. Is the Government under any obligation, because they want to go, to pay their fare?

Mr. MONEY. Of course, as a general proposition the Government is under no obligation to pay anybody's fare; but here is a different case. Here is a special case. Here is the case of a remnant of a tribe who have been moved West, not for their benefit, but for the benefit of the white people of the country. The Government paid their way. Here is a remnant left. They may want to go there, and it is proper for them to go. It is their home. Whether they choose to go or not, they have a right to go if they choose. The question is not whether or not they have a right to go, or whether or not the Choctaws in the Territory are willing to have them, or whether they shall have a share of the land, but simply whether Congress will appropriate $15,000 to transport those who, for lack of means, can not go but are willing to go. I am willing to submit it to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes have it.

Mr. MONEY. I call for a division.

Mr. GALLINGER. We may as well have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when Mr. MALLORY'S name was called). My colleague is unavoidably absent from the Senate. He is paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

Mr. MONEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], but as this is not a political question and our pair is a liberal one, I will take the liberty of voting "nay," unless I am informed by somebody that the junior Senator from Iowa would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PETTUS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. CLAPP (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], who is absent. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HANNA. I am paired with the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], who is absent, and I refrain from voting.

Mr. CLAY. I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I inquire if the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am paired with that Senator, and withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN. I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I shall have to withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 16, as follows;

YEAS—34.

So Mr. STEWART'S amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read section 42 of the bill.

Mr. MONEY. In section 42, page 29, lines 11 and 12, I move to strike out "continuously," after "resided" to insert "bona fide," and in line 15 to strike out the word "continuous" and insert "bona fide." That preserves the phraseology which has been maintained through the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 11, after the words "shall have," strike out the word "continuously;" after the word "resided," in line 12, insert "bona fide," and in line 15 strike out the word "continuous" and insert "bona fide;" so as to make the section read:

42. When any such Mississippi Choctaw shall have resided bona fide upon the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations for a period of three years, including his residence thereon before and after such enrollment, he shall, upon due proof of such bona fide residence, made in such manner and before such officer as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, receive a patent for his allotment, as provided in the Atoka agreement, and he shall hold the lands allotted to him as provided in this agreement for citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations.

Mr. STEWART. I hope that will not be done. They ought to stay there for three years continuously.

Mr. MONEY. It does provide for a bona fide residence of three years. The term "bona fide" has been used all through the bill in just such relations.

Mr. STEWART. Very well; let it go in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill and read to the end of section 44, page 30, line 20.

Mr. MONEY. In section 44, page 30, line 8, I move to strike out the word "continuous."

Mr. STEWART. Let it be done.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to the end of section 54, page 34, line 11.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I offer an amendment, to come in at the end of section 54.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, line 11, at the end of section 54, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That as to the town sites set aside as aforesaid, the owner of the improvements shall be required to pay the full appraised value of the lot instead of the percentage named in the Atoka agreement, and where, because of his failure to purchase within the time limited in the Atoka agreement, the lot is sold at public auction, the purchaser at such sale shall pay to the owner of the improvements the price for which the lot shall be sold, less the full appraised value thereof, and shall pay such appraised value into the United States Treasury instead of the percentage named in the Atoka agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to the end of line 13, on page 41.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I simply desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that here is the second national park provided for in one day. This land is to be purchased at the expense of the Government, maintained at the expense of the Government, and in maintaining it the Government is to become the keeper of bath houses and the dispenser of mineral waters. I can not agree to such an arrangement. While I would be glad to see those springs devoted to the use of those people, if they are willing to maintain them, or if it could be maintained without the Government becoming the proprietor of bath houses, I could overlook the question of expense. This can not be done, however, under the bill as it stands, and I move to strike out the entire provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, beginning with line 12 on page 39, down to and including line 13 on page 41.

Mr. FORAKER. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To strike out the provision in relation to Sulphur Springs, from line 12, on page 39, to and including line 13 on page 41.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the part proposed to be stricken out be read.

Mr. STEWART. It has been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has just been read. It will be read again if the Senator desires.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The SECRETARY. Beginning in line 12, on page 39, it is proposed to strike out the following:

SULPHUR SPRINGS.

64. The two tribes hereby absolutely and unqualifiedly relinquish, cede, and convey unto the United States a tract or tracts of land at and in the vicinity of the village of Sulphur, in the Chickasaw Nation, of not exceeding 640 acres, to be selected, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, within four months after the final ratification of this agreement, and to embrace all the natural springs in and about said village, and so much of Sulphur Creek, Rock Creek, Buckhorn Creek, and the lands adjacent to said natural springs and creeks as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior for the proper utilization and control of said springs and the waters of said creeks, which lands shall be so selected as to cause the least interference with the contemplated town site at that place consistent with the purposes for which said cession is made, and when selected the ceded lands shall be held, owned, and controlled by the United States absolutely and without any restriction, save that no part thereof shall be platted or disposed of for town-site purposes during the existence of the two tribal governments. Such other lands as may be embraced in a town site at that point shall be disposed of in the manner provided in the Atoka agreement for the disposition of town sites.

Within ninety days after the selection of the lands so ceded there shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the two tribes, from the unappropriated public moneys of the United States, $20 per acre for each acre so selected, which shall be in full compensation for the lands so ceded, and such moneys shall, upon the dissolution of the tribal governments, be divided per capita among the members of the tribes, freedmen excepted, as are other funds of the tribes. All improvements upon the lands so selected which were lawfully there at the time of the ratification of this agreement by Congress shall be appraised, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, at the true value thereof at the time of the selection of said lands, and shall be paid for by warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Interior upon the Treasurer of the United States.

Until otherwise provided by law, the Secretary of the Interior may, under rules prescribed for that purpose, regulate and control the use of the water of said springs and creeks and the temporary use and occupation of the lands so ceded. No person shall occupy any portion of the lands so ceded, or carry on any business thereon, except as provided in said rules, and until otherwise provided by Congress the laws of the United States relating to the introduction, possession, sale, and giving away of liquors or intoxicants of any kind within the Indian country or Indian reservations shall be applicable to the lands so ceded, and said lands shall remain within the jurisdiction of the United States court for the southern district of Indian Territory.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, is this provision in the bill a a part of the treaty arrangement?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALDRICH. Already concluded?

Mr. STEWART. It is not.

Mr. BAILEY. The treaty has been negotiated with the Indian tribes, but it is not concluded until the bill passes through Congress and has been ratified by the Indians.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the chairman of the committee explain why any such arrangement as this is proposed or attempted.

Mr. STEWART. I do not know why it is proposed. The treaty was made between the Secretary of the Interior and the Indians. I do not know the character of the springs or the importance of them. I shall not resist the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Nevada will permit me, I know something about the conditions there. For years people have visited those springs. The waters are said to be excellent and curative. I presume that a greater number of people go there from the Congressional district which I formerly represented than from any other place in the United States. It is desirable to preserve those springs for those purposes, and the community of Sulphur Springs sent a representative to Washington who brought a letter of introduction to me.

I said to him very frankly that I would be glad to see the springs preserved, and that I was willing to see the United States negotiate with the Indians and acquire title and pass it to anybody else who will maintain them. But, he said, they did not want to have those springs pass into private ownership, so that men may be charged for the waters. I have never known anything in this world worth having that could be obtained without paying for it. If the man who gets it does not pay for it, somebody else must, and, as in this case, we pay taxes to the Government and the Government pays out the taxes to maintain the property.

I am utterly opposed to governmental ownership of such a plant. I will support heartily a proposition to acquire title from the Indians and pass it to that community, or pass it to any company that will improve and maintain the property, but I am utterly opposed to the Government of the United States becoming the proprietor of bath houses and springs. We have had a good deal of trouble about such an arrangement at Hot Springs, Ark., where the Government, I believe, rents the springs, though it may maintain some free public baths.

But while it is very necessary that people shall have baths, it is equally necessary that they shall learn to provide them for themselves. I do not know any better reason why the Government should maintain public baths than why it should not maintain a hotel for the accommodation of those who will go there to enjoy the waters. It is simply a proposition for the Government to engage in the private occupation of maintaining a pleasure or health resort for the people of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. I find I am in entire sympathy with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. I did not know but that the chairman of the committee who recommended this provision had some reason for supporting it. We seem to be engaged this morning in providing for purchasing lands, the management of bath houses, and all kinds of enterprises by the Government of the United States, as the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has already said. I did not know but some Senator might have some reason to give why this policy should be adopted, or why such a provision should be in this bill.

Mr. STEWART. This is a House bill, and this provision was negotiated by the Interior Department. They thought there was good reason for it. The Committee on Indian Affairs did not see fit to strike it out, although I did not see that there was anything of any great importance in it. Still the provision may be very well, and I think the Government has in a great many instances made reservations of springs of this kind. I rather doubt the policy of it, but not sufficiently so to oppose the provision, to oppose the committee, or to oppose the House, but I shall not resist the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], notwithstanding the sarcasm of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator from Nevada supposes that there is any sarcasm in my remarks. I did not intend that there should be any. I simply supposed, in my innocence, that somebody had some reason for putting this rather extraordinary proposition in this bill. It passed, I suppose, the scrutiny of the Committee on Indian Affairs, over which the honorable Senator from Nevada presides with great ability, and I suppose that in their minds there existed some reason for this provision; but it seems there is no reason except that the provision has come from the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], to strike out the section which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to the end of line 4, on page 44.

Mr. STEWART. I move to amend, in line 4, on page 44, before the word "days," by striking out "ninety" and inserting "one hundred and twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. In line 6, on page 44, before the word "special," I move to strike out the article "a" and insert the word "any."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. In line 15, after the word "both," I move to strike out the words "said tribes or" and insert the words "the Choctaw and Chickasaw."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 74, on page 44, line 15, after the word "both," it is proposed to strike out "said tribes or" and insert "the Choctaw and Chickasaw;" so as to read:

The votes cast in both the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations shall be forthwith returned and duly certified by the precinct officers, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, after disposing of section 32, and while I was at lunch, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] offered an amendment to section 54, which I move to reconsider.

The section was reported to the Senate by the committee, and as it stood in the bill as it came from the House provides that as to certain towns, commonly called the new towns of the Territory, the lots should be sold upon the same terms and at the same prices as the lots were sold in what are commonly called the old towns of the Territory.

The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas requires the holders of lots in these new towns to pay exactly twice as much for them as the people in the old towns have paid. Under the Atoka agreement the holders of lots in the towns then settled were required to pay 50 per cent of their appraised value. In May, 1900, Congress passed an act which provided that in the settlement of these new towns the lots should be laid out and sold exactly as under the Atoka agreement. Therefore, when these new railroads were constructed into the Territory the people went into those towns and settled there, under the assurance of a law of Congress that they would be permitted to acquire their lots upon the terms and at the prices accorded to the people of the old towns.

Mr. President, the equity of the people of these new towns is really stronger than is the equity of the people in the older places, because in those older towns men settled there years ago. They have enjoyed those lots at the nominal price which they originally paid the Indians who claimed the land, without the payment of taxes and without any of the burdens which ordinarily accompany the development and improvement of towns.

In the course of ten or fifteen years this has been quite a saving to those people, while in these new towns, some of them less than two years old, the lot holders have derived practically no benefit. They will be required, under the law, to purchase and pay for them almost as early as they have been able to improve them, and thus to enjoy them. Therefore I insist that it will be an unjust discrimination against the towns along the line of the new railroads to impose upon them a price twice as great as that accorded to people in the towns on the older railroads, and it is a discrimination for which no good excuse can be offered.

It must be remembered that when those people went into those towns and built them up it gave a town-lot value to what would otherwise have been acreage land, and the Government simply recognized an equity in that condition.

But worse than this discrimination would be the fact that these men settled those towns under the guaranty of the law of Congress that they should be permitted to purchase and pay for their lots at 50 per cent of their appraised value.

I therefore hope the Senate will reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas was adopted and leave this provision as it appears in the House bill. It was originally in the treaty negotiated by the Interior Department with the Indians provided as the Senator from Arkansas has provided in his amendment, but that treaty was passed in the face of the law of Congress upon that precise subject. I am not willing to believe that the Congress of the United States would authorize citizens of this country to go in there under a guaranty that when they have built up these towns and given those lots a value far above what they otherwise would have possessed and then repudiate its guaranty to them and compel them to pay double the price at which they were authorized to suppose they could purchase.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted. There is not a town in the United States, except in the Indian Territory, to which a man can go and take possession of an unoccupied lot without paying full value for it. There is nowhere else that a man can go and settle in a town and get a lot by paying one-half of what it is worth, and get title to it.

There is no reason that I can understand why these people should be required to sell their town lots for less than they are worth to people who want to settle on them, which does not apply to every other community in the world.

Mr. STEWART. It is because these lots belong to Indians.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly. The reason why under the Atoka agreement arrangement was made that those who held town lots should pay but one-half of the valuation thereof was because those people had gone into that country before there was any arrangement by which they were to take their title, and they had made arrangements with the Indian tribes, paying them some sort of compensation for the right to settle upon those lots.

It was insisted by me and by other people who were connected with the making of that arrangement that the money those people had already paid for their possessory right to such lots should not be confiscated, and that they ought to have credit for the amount of money they had paid to get possession of the lands in the first place; or else there ought to be a deduction in the valuation in consideration of the amount of money they had already paid for the use of their land. This was a sound reason applying to towns where settlement had already been made.

But now comes in another class of cases. The railroads have been built and people are going into that Territory by the thousands. New towns are being started everywhere, and they are started with a full knowledge of these facts. None of the equities which apply under the Atoka agreement apply in these cases.

When a man goes and locates in one of these towns, this provision of law simply is that a man in the Indian Territory shall do as he does everywhere else, pay for what he gets its actual market value, no more and no less. The towns are small; the country is out on the prairie, and the valuation will be small. The lots have to be valued by people who are disinterested, and they will make the valuation what it should be.

Referring to the law which the Senator says was passed last year, it does no harm, because men who have gone there under that law and have taken possession of their lots under that law will not be disturbed by this amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator does not understand that that construction is placed on the law either by the Indian attorneys or by the Interior Department. If the Senator would make it apply to towns hereafter laid out, I should have no objection, because in that case the people who go into the towns go in with a perfect knowledge of their rights.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Precisely; and in this case while I should not be willing to have it apply to towns that are built hereafter, it ought to apply to towns that are now in existence where the lots are unoccupied. If a man went in under that law in any town last year, and he has any rights under that law, they can not be disturbed; but if another man goes into the same town and settles on an unoccupied lot he ought to pay under the new law; and it is right that he should.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator does not mean to say that a citizen of the United States who went into a Territory under that law acquired any vested right which secured him against disturbance by a subsequent law of Congress?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do say that when a citizen of the United States went into the Indian Territory under that law and took possession of a lot under that law, he has a vested right that can not be disturbed by Congress; but if he has not taken possession of the lot under that law and is going into another town somewhere else to take a new lot, we ought not to give him a right to buy that lot for one-half what it is worth.

Now, there can be no difficulty, as I see it. If there is any trouble about that, if the operation of these two sections will not be exactly what I say, I am willing that it shall be corrected in conference so as to make it do just what I mean to say; that is, that those who have bought lots under this law shall have the right to take those lots, paying 50 per cent of their value, but that anybody else who now takes a lot in that town or any other new town shall pay what is a fair market price. I think they ought to pay it all.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas and I do not differ so widely. I think it is very true that a man who goes into a town in the Indian Territory or elsewhere should be required to pay the value of the property which he acquires, but the Senator overlooks a fact which very materially modifies that general statement, and that fact is, if these people could have acquired their property at the time they settled there and made the town, they would have acquired it at an acreage price. But they have gone there and settled these communities, built up these towns, given these lots a good value, and yet, because they were unable to acquire the title when they settled on the lot, they are compelled to pay for the very increase produced by their presence there.

Some gentlemen may think that is a dangerous approach to the doctrine of unearned increment, but I think not, I believe in the ownership of land, and I do not believe in the onerous taxation of it. The truth of it is, if I had my way I would exempt land from all taxation rather than to impose all taxes on it.

The Senator from Arkansas overlooks another thing. He says that the original Atoka agreement recognized certain equities because the people had long been in the Indian Territory. The Senator forgets, however, that when those people went into the Indian Territory they had not the slightest guaranty either from the Indian tribes or from the Government of the United States that they would ever be permitted to purchase those lots on any terms. They took their chance.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I beg pardon. In many cases they did buy of the Indian tribes.

Mr. BAILEY. They could not buy from the Indian tribes. The Indian tribes never saw an hour when they could sell a foot of land in the Choctaw Nation or the Chickasaw Nation without the consent of the Government.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is true, but nevertheless they did do it.

Mr. BAILEY. No; the Senator is mistaken. What they did was that where an Indian had taken possession of a certain tract of land under the joint ownership and assumed to be the proprietor of that land, they sold town lots. But that sale was an absolute nullity under the law.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is true.

Mr. BAILEY. The Government sought to preserve a condition which it found to exist, and provided in those cases that the owners who had improved lots should have the right to buy them at a stipulated figure; that is, at a certain percentage of their appraised value.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BAILEY. Wait just a moment, until I finish this statement. That was the condition of the original towns.

In the case of the new towns the people who went there went with an absolute statutory guarantee on the part of the United States that when they were ready to sell the lots the occupants of them should have the right to buy them at 50 per cent of their appraised value. Therefore I insist that the equities of the holders in the new towns are stronger than the equities of the holders in the old towns.

It would be an inexcusable breach of faith with the enterprising men who have settled the new towns in that Territory now to compel them to pay twice as much as the Government has agreed they shall pay.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me? I think I can make a suggestion which will bring the two Senators together. As I understand, the Senator from Arkansas does not wish to affect the rights of any who have already settled. Again, the half price applies only to those who have improved town lots, and by amending the section——

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator from Nevada, in order to expedite the matter, that if the Senator from Arkansas, who doubtless will be a member of the conference committee, will agree with me that he will arrange it as he says here——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I intend that it shall be; and if there is any doubt, I am willing that it shall be fixed.

Mr. BAILEY. I am willing to take the Senator's word for it.

Mr. STEWART. It reads:

That as to the town sites set aside as aforesaid the owner of the improvements shall be required—

Suppose we should make it read thus:

That as to the town sites set aside as aforesaid any person who shall hereafter become the owner——

Mr. BAILEY. Permit me to suggest to the Senator from Nevada that I would hesitate to deal upon the spur of the moment with a matter of this importance, and I would prefer to withdraw my motion to reconsider and accept the assurance of the Senator from Arkansas that he will arrange it in the way he says he intended to make it by his amendment.

Mr. STEWART. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments as in Committee of the Whole?

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, while I was out a section relating to sulphur springs in the Territory was stricken out, as I understand, on motion of the Senator from Texas. If I had been here, I should have opposed the amendment. I think the section is a very proper one, and the best possible disposition we could make of those natural mineral springs, where there is now a town which has as many as 15,000 visitors during a season. But owing to the lateness of the hour I do not know that I desire to enter upon a discussion of it now. I shall ask the conference committee to consider it very carefully.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was somewhat responsible, perhaps, for the section going out. I for one should be very glad to hear the Senator's explanation. It seemed to me there was no reason for legislation of this kind. If there are reasons which the Senator from Connecticut can give, I should certainly be very glad to hear them.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will permit me, I hope that when the conferees take this matter under consideration they will devise a way to give the people the benefit of those waters without imposing upon the United States the duty of maintaining the springs. I hope that will be done.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, perhaps the only point in the Territory where there is anything of this character is at Sulphur, and there are a great variety of mineral springs there. They have already become very noted as such. They belong to the Indians; that is, they belong to this communal title of the Indians. We can not very well allot them, dividing up the land into 160-acre tracts, without putting the waters where they can not be controlled for the benefit of the place. They will simply go into the hands of speculators if we do that.

On talking this matter all over in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, on consultation with the Secretary and with the Indians and with the Dawes Commission, it was thought that this on the whole was the best way of doing it. It was a matter of some question there how the springs should be preserved for the benefit of the public, and this method was finally the one hit upon by the Assistant Attorney-General for the Interior Department, Mr. Van Devanter, as being the best method which could be devised for that purpose. Certainly those springs ought not to pass into the hands of speculators, and it was thought that if the Government bought this land of the Indians at a very small price—the Indians thought they were not getting enough for it, but agreed to it finally—it would be in the hands of the Government and the Government could dispose of the property under circumstances which would save it from speculation and speculators.

I think that that is the very best way to treat it, but I have no desire to go into a long discussion about it. I am willing that it shall go into conference without its being understood that the Senate has acted finally and intelligently upon this subject.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question. Is it proposed by this provision that the Government of the United States shall enter upon the control and management of another health resort?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That has not been my intention at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. It so appears from the language of the section.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think so.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I certainly did not understand it when it was read.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. For the time being the Government, having purchased the land, is authorized to make such rules and regulations with reference to the use of the water as may be necessary in order to have the public have a right to it. That is all there is to it. It says:

> Until otherwise provided by law, the Secretary of the Interior may, under rules prescribed for that purpose, regulate and control the use of the water of said springs and creeks and the temporary use and occupation of the lands so ceded.

There is no provision here making an appropriation. The Secretary can expend no money on it at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Connecticut understands as well as I do that these things are always commenced in that way. I imagine if we should take up the history of the Hot Springs in Arkansas we should find that some very small, innocent provision like this was the basis of the large Government expenditure around those springs. Now, it seems to me that the Government of the United States ought not to go further into the health-resort business unless there is some very good reason for it. I understand the Government of the United States is to buy the lands.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. And it is to establish a health resort.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator says temporarily they are to make rules and regulations for their government. That is an entering wedge. Next year the Senators from the territory around there, including, I have no doubt, my friend the Senator from Texas, will be here asking for an appropriation to build some buildings which are necessary to develop the springs that the Government has bought of the Indians, and the next year after that we will be called upon to do something else. We on this side of the Chamber are sometimes accused of being in favor of parental government, but if this is not a parental measure I do not know what can be.

It seems to me, unless there is some reason which I have not yet heard developed, that this section ought to stay out, having been voted out by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the vote in the Senate on the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be taken in gross?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am perfectly willing, if the Senator from Connecticut desires to have a reconsideration of the expulsion of this section from the bill, that he may have a vote in the Senate on the amendment. I have no disposition to preclude that action, if the Senator from Connecticut desires it.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to have read the language that was stricken from the bill which relates to the subject just under discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, other than this one?

Mr. SPOONER. Am I to be precluded thereby from having this language read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the Chair said, "other than this one."

Mr. SPOONER. I must wait?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will leave this amendment open to consideration. The question is on concurring in the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole and reported to the Senate.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment is still open in the Senate to any amendment whatever. The Senator from Wisconsin desires that it shall be read. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SULPHUR SPRINGS.

64. The two tribes hereby absolutely and unqualifiedly relinquish, cede, and convey unto the United States a tract or tracts of land at and in the vicinity of the village of Sulphur, in the Chickasaw Nation, of not exceeding 640 acres, to be selected, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, within four months after the final ratification of this agreement, and to embrace all the natural springs in and about said village, and so much of Sulphur Creek, Rock Creek, Buckhorn Creek, and the lands adjacent to said natural springs and creeks as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior for the proper utilization and control of said springs and the waters of said creeks, which lands shall be so selected as to cause the least interference with the contemplated town site at that place consistent with the purposes for which said cession is made, and when selected the ceded lands shall be held, owned, and controlled by the United States absolutely and without any restriction, save that no part thereof shall be platted or disposed of for town-site purposes during the existence of the two tribal governments. Such other lands as may be embraced in a town site at that point shall be disposed of in the manner provided in the Atoka agreement for the disposition of town sites.

Within ninety days after the selection of the lands so ceded there shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the two tribes, from the unappropriated public moneys of the United States, $20 per acre for each acre so selected, which shall be in full compensation for the lands so ceded, and such moneys shall, upon the dissolution of the tribal governments, be divided per capita among the members of the tribes, freedmen excepted, as are other funds of the tribes. All improvements upon the lands so selected which were lawfully there at the time of the ratification of this agreement by Congress shall be appraised, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, at the true value thereof at the time of the selection of said lands, and shall be paid for by warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Interior upon the Treasurer of the United States. Until otherwise provided by law, the Secretary of the Interior may, under rules prescribed for that purpose, regulate and control the use of the water of said springs and creeks and the temporary use and occupation of the lands so ceded. No person shall occupy any portion of the lands so ceded, or carry on any business thereon, except as provided in said rules, and until otherwise provided by Congress the laws of the United States relating to the introduction, possession, sale, and giving away of liquors or intoxicants of any kind within the Indian country or Indian reservations shall be applicable to the lands so ceded, and said lands shall remain within the jurisdiction of the United States court for the southern district of Indian Territory.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I think it is quite obvious that the bill can not pass to-night, and I should like to ask unanimous consent to call up a little local bill, which will take about three minutes.

Mr. STEWART. This bill ought to pass now.

Mr. TELLER. It ought to have passed four hours ago, if it is to pass at all.

Mr. STEWART. It is not my fault. I shall object to any business coming in. I have not done anything to delay it. There is a little byplay going on here. I think they are after the Senator—I do not see him now. I think the whole of this byplay for the last half hour has been to prevent some other bill from being reached. I shall not permit anything to come in which I can prevent. I can not prevent this byplay. It may go on all night. I can not prevent the language being read over a half dozen times if my friend wants it.

Mr. SPOONER. I have never heard it read.

Mr. STEWART. If you would stay here and listen——

Mr. SPOONER. I stay here and listen a great deal, and I have listened to a great deal from the Senator from Nevada, as he does from me.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the question will be put.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the bill I refer to passed. It is a bill that I tried to have passed last night, and the Senator from Connecticut would not allow me. It is a local bill.

Mr. STEWART. Inasmuch as the Senator from Colorado is not in the byplay I will yield.

Mr. TELLER. No; I am not in the byplay.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Colorado will not come into the byplay, I think probably some one will object to his bill.

Mr. TELLER. No; I hope not. It is a bill for our water company in Denver, and I am very anxious to get it through the House.

Mr. STEWART. I yield.

SOUTH PLATTE CANAL AND RESERVOIR COMPANY.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4815) to grant certain lands to the South Platte Canal and Reservoir Company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him, which will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPOONER. Is it a private corporation to which the grant is to be made?

Mr. TELLER. It is a private corporation which furnishes the water for the city of Denver, a corporation that is spending now upon this very ground a million and a half dollars in the way of——

Mr. SPOONER. They have a contract with the city.

Mr. TELLER. They have a contract with the city, and we expect ultimately that the city will become the owner of the property, whenever we can make proper arrangements with the company. The measure has the approval of the Land Department, the Secretary and the Commissioner. It is essential that the company should have this land to preserve the purity of the water. It is land that has no value except for the scattering timber on it and the grass, and the company desires to fence it in to keep cattle from going in there and fouling the water.

In addition, I will state that the company are building at the foot of the mountain, about 25 miles distant, a modern filtration plant, and spending a large amount of money on it. It is a measure in which the people are interested, and therefore I have been anxious to get it passed in order that it may be passed by the House at the present session.

Mr. ALDRICH. The report is very short, and I have no doubt contains a great deal of information, and I ask that it may be read.

Mr. TELLER. There are some amendments which the committee have reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment of the committee will be stated.

Mr. ALDRICH. I asked some time ago that the report might be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. HANSBROUGH on the 17th instant.

Mr. ALDRICH. Senators around me seem to understand this case very thoroughly, and in their behalf I withdraw my request for the reading of the report.

The amendments of the Committee on Public Lands were, on page 2, line 1, after the word "two," to strike out "three, ten;" in line 2, after the word "fourteen," to strike out "fifteen, twenty-two;" in line 3, before "twenty-four," to insert "and," and after "twenty-four" to strike out "twenty-five, twenty-six, and twenty-seven," and in line 5, before the word "nineteen," to insert "and," and after "nineteen" to strike out "and thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Whereas the South Platte Canal and Reservoir Company is the owner of a reservoir from which the inhabitants of the city of Denver, Colo., are supplied with water for domestic purposes; and

Whereas it is necessary for the health of the people of said city that the waters of said reservoir should not be contaminated and that the principal drainage basins leading into said reservoir should be under the control of the owners of said reservoir: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described tracts of land, situated in the counties of Jefferson and Douglas, in the State of Colorado, described as follows: Sections 1, 2, 11, 12, 13, 14, 23, and 24, in township 10 south, range 71 west, of sixth principal meridian; and sections 6, 7, 18, and 19, in township 10 south, range 70 west, of sixth principal meridian, all within the South Platte Forest Reserve, containing 12,800 acres, be, and the same are hereby, granted and conveyed to the South Platte Canal and Reservoir Company, a corporation of the State of Colorado, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre by said company to the United States, to have and to hold said lands to its use and behoof forever for purposes of water storage and supply of its waterworks; and for said purposes said company shall forever have the right, in its discretion, to control and use any and all parts of the premises herein conveyed, and in the construction of reservoirs, laying such pipes and mains, and in making such improvements as may be necessary to utilize the water contained in any natural or constructed reservoirs upon said premises.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER subsequently said: I find an error in the bill just passed. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the votes by which the bill was passed that I may offer an amendment which the committee failed to report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado to reconsider the votes by which the bill was passed and by which it was engrossed and read a third time? The Chair hears none, and the bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I move to strike out, in line 8, before the word "acres," the words "twelve thousand eight hundred" and to insert "seven thousand six hundred and eighty." This makes it conform to the amendments that were adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGREEMENT WITH CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13172) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate——

Mr. STEWART. There can be no unanimous consent given until this bill is out of the way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, which was reserved.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. STEWART, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas were appointed.

PUBLIC LANDS AND BUILDINGS IN PORTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate may resume the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14244) authorizing the President to reserve public lands and buildings in the island of Porto Rico for public uses, and granting other public lands and buildings to the government of Porto Rico. The bill was under consideration yesterday, and the amendments of the committee were agreed to except only as to section 4.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All the amendments reported from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico were agreed to yesterday except section 4. Section 4 will be read.

The SECRETARY. The committee report to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 4. That the resident commissioner from Porto Rico to the United States, provided for by section 39 of the act of April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," shall have a seat in the House of Representatives, with the right to debate, but not to vote, and shall be entitled to the same compensation for salary and other allowances, and to the same rights and privileges as the Delegates from the Terrritories of the United States, and his term of office shall commence on the 4th day of March next succeeding the date of his election; and the term of office of the present incumbent is hereby extended to the 3d day of March, 1903.

Mr. SPOONER. In section 4, page 3, line 11, after the word "purposes," I move to strike out the words "shall have a seat in the House of Representatives with the right to debate, but not to vote, and."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. After the word "entitled," in line 13, I move to strike out the words:

To the same compensation for salary and other allowances and to the same rights and privileges as the Delegates from the Territories of the United States.

An in lieu of those words to insert:

In addition to his salary as now fixed by law, to his actual expenses in traveling to and from Porto Rico once annually.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the President to reserve public lands and buildings in the island of Porto Rico for public uses, and granting other public lands and buildings to the government of Porto Rico, and for other purposes."

LIEUT. COMMANDER WILLIAM P. RANDALL.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 5329) authorizing the President to appoint Lieut. Commander William P. Randall, retired, United States Navy, a commander on the retired list.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will yield to the Senator in a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read in full to the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I desire to speak to the bill, apparently.

I had intended to call up this afternoon my motion to discharge the Committee on Territories from the statehood bill, but, as was apparent to every Senator upon this floor, obstructive tactics were being resorted to to prevent our reaching a vote in time to accomplish anything in the direction of its passage, and as a number of Senators desired to leave the Chamber I assured them that it would go over until to-morrow.

I am not going to object to the passage, by unanimous consent, of any bills of unimportance, such as have been called up that Senators wish to have considered, but I desire to give notice here and now that after this evening I shall object to unanimous consent in every instance until the motion to discharge the Committee on Territories from the statehood bill is disposed of. I will enter to-morrow upon the Journal, if the Chair decides it is in order, a general objection to business transacted in that manner.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know that the rules recognize any such general objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has been read?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill the words "with the retired pay of that grade from the date of such appointment;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Lieut. Commander William P. Randall, United States Navy, retired, a commander on the retired list of the Navy, with the retired pay of that grade from the date of such appointment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM G. MILLER.

Mr. CLAY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 1456) granting a pension to William G. Miller be taken up and passed.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of William G. Miller, late of Captain Harris's company, Georgia Volunteers, Creek Indian war, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES A. SCOTT.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14656) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Scott.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Charles A. Scott, late of Companies M and F, Eighteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION BY INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Mr. CARMACK. I am directed by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the resolution concerning an investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission, to report it favorably with amendments, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The resolution is reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce?

Mr. CARMACK. Reported from the Interstate Commerce, unanimously reported.

The amendments of the Committee on Interstate Commerce were, on page 1, line 9, after the word "differences" to insert "if any;" in line 10, after the word "articles," to strike out "and against shipments of imported articles;" and on page 2, line 3, to strike out all of paragraph 4 in the following words:

4. Whether in the opinion of said Commission any such differences in rates in favor of import and against domestic shipments operate to produce discriminations and preferences in favor of foreign manufacturers and shippers and against American manufacturers and shippers which ought to be removed, but which can not be remedied by proceedings under the act to regulate commerce; and if so, in what manner that statute should be amended to prevent such discriminations and preferences,

So as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and is hereby, directed to investigate and report to the Senate during the month of December next, in such form and to such extent as may be practicable—

1. The rates filed with said Commission by common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce and now in force on import and domestic traffic of like kind carried from ports of entry in the United States to interior points of destination which show material differences, if any, in favor of through shipments of imported articles and against shipments of like articles originating at such ports of entry.

2. What, if any, kinds or classes of imported articles have actually been transported at any time between January 1 and July 1 of the present year by common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce at rates from ports of entry in the United States to interior points of destination materially less than the rates contemporaneously charged by such carriers upon the same kinds or classes of articles as domestic shipments from such ports of entry to the same interior points of destination; and whether, if it can be ascertained, the rates actually charged upon both the import and domestic traffic were in conformity with the rates in effect thereon as shown in rate schedules filed with said Commission.

3. Show in said report in connection with any such differences in schedule rates in favor of import and against domestic shipments the tariff or customs duties in force under the laws of Congress upon such import traffic carried at any time during the six months' period above specified; and to enable compliance with this requirement the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to furnish the said Commission, upon its application, a statement showing the tariff or customs duties applicable to such import traffic.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CHIEF ENGINEER DAVID SMITH.

Mr. HANNA. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6034) raising the rank of Chief Engineer David Smith on the retired list of the Navy.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to advance on the retired list from March 3, 1899, to the next higher grade Chief Engineer David Smith, United States Navy, retired, who served with credit through both the civil and Spanish-American wars, and who, in the performance of duty, incurred disability from exposure, rendering him an invalid, requiring the services of an attendant ever since his detachment, February 7, 1899.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN WILMINGTON, N. C.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14802) for the purchase of real estate for revenue and customs purposes at Wilmington, N. C., to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPRESSION OF TRAIN ROBBERY.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I desire to ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6016) for the suppression of train robbery in the Territories of the United States and elsewhere, and for other purposes. I wish to say that this bill was reported by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] from the Committee on the Judiciary. I promised him when he went away that I would call it up at the first opportunity. It is a bill which provides for the punishment of train robbers holding up railroad trains, and the amendment is in the form in which the bill was passed at the last session of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read in full to the Senate. The Secretary will read the amendment instead of the part proposed to be stricken out.

The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That if any person shall willfully and maliciously trespass upon or enter upon any railroad train, railroad car, or railroad locomotive, within any Territory of the United States, or any place subject to the exclusive jurisdiction or control thereof, with the intent to commit murder, robbery, or any unlawful violence upon or against any passenger on said train or car, or upon or against any engineer, conductor, fireman, brakeman, or any officer or employee connected with said locomotive, train, or car, or upon or against any express messenger or mail agent on said train, or in any such car thereof, or to commit any crime or offense against any person or property thereon, such person shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding twenty years, or by fine not exceeding $5,000, or both, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall counsel, aid, abet, and assist in the perpetration of any of the offenses set forth in the preceding section shall be deemed to be principals therein.

SEC. 3. That upon the trial of any person charged with any offense set forth in this act it shall not be necessary to set forth or prove the particular person against whom it was intended to commit the offense, or that it was intended to commit such offense against any particular person.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TELLER. What committee reported the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Committee on the Judiciary. The bill was carefully considered in the Committee on the Judiciary last year.

Mr. TELLER. Is it the same bill?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is the same bill, and it passed the Senate last year.

Mr. BATE. It is confined exclusively to the Territories?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. To the Territories and places exclusively under the jurisdiction of the United States, like the District of Columbia, arsenals, forts, dockyards, and docks.

Mr. BATE. That is expressed in the bill itself?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE LEA FEBIGER.

Mr. McENERY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6117) for the relief of George Lea Febiger.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to relieve the estate of George Lea Febiger, late first lieutenant, Thirty-third United States Infantry Volunteers, from accountability for subsistence funds in the sum of $129.38, with which he was charged and for which he was accountable on October 24, 1900, on which date he was killed in action.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIMBER LANDS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11062) to amend an act entitled "An act to make certain grants of land to the Territory of New Mexico, and for other purposes."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in line 9, after the word "sold," to insert "at public sale;" and in line 12, after the word "obtainable," to insert "at not less than $4 per acre;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of an act approved June 21, 1898, entitled "An act to make certain grants of land to the Territory of New Mexico, and for other purposes," is amended by adding at the end of the said section the following:

"Provided, That timber upon lands authorized to be sold in this section may be sold at public sale in tracts not to exceed 25,000 acres to any one person, corporation, or association for the highest and best price obtainable, at not less than $4 per acre, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the board of public lands or the legislative assembly of said Territory."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to have the Senator from South Dakota explain what this bill provides. It looks to me like selling timber lands in New Mexico to the amount of 25,000 acres, which is nearly all the timber land they have.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, this bill has passed the House. As I understand, in 1898 Congress donated to the Territory of New Mexico a portion of the public lands for educational and for State university purposes, which they were to have upon their final admission into the Union. The law provided that those lands should be leased. Other donations were made for public buildings, for irrigation, and for other purposes, and under the law those lands might be sold in quantities not exceeding 160 acres to any single person. There are timber lands amongst those lands that were donated to the Territory far removed from railroad communication, and the Territory is anxious to utilize the money derived from the sale of the lands.

This bill was introduced originally in the House providing for the sale of the lands, which was amended and reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands of that body, authorizing the sale of timber on the lands, so that the lands might be preserved. The bill passed the House, came to the Senate, and was uanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate with the amendments suggested. So the lands now belong to the Territory. They have the absolute control and disposition of them, only limited by the act of Congress, that neither in a lease nor in a sale shall any person obtain exceeding 160 acres. It is impossible to develop the lands and cut the timber because they are so far removed that it will be necessary to build a railroad, I think, something like 50 or 100 miles into the wilderness in order to reach them.

Mr. SCOTT. Do I understand the Senator to say that the money derived from the sale of these timber lands is to be used for irrigation?

Mr. GAMBLE. Part of it. I will not say that——

Mr. SCOTT. We have already passed an irrigation bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The money goes to the Territory.

Mr. GAMBLE. It goes to the Territory?

Mr. SPOONER. I suggest that this is a matter of considerable importance, and I ask that it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. GAMBLE. I should be very glad if the Senator would suggest an amendment, if he so desires. The Territorial authorities are very anxious for the passage of this bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not objecting to the amendment, but I think the subject is an important one, and I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] objects to the present consideration of the bill, and it goes over.

HENRY P. MACLOON.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4170) granting an increase of pension to Henry P. Macloon.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Henry P. Macloon, late second lieutenant Company K, Twenty-fifth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADELL AUGUSTA STEWARD.

Mr. QUARLES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6031) authorizing the payment of part of the pension of Ira Steward to Adell Augusta Steward.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be paid to Adell Augusta Steward, the former wife of Ira Steward, late of Company D, Thirteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, upon her properly executed voucher and out of the pension due or to become due from and after the passage of this act to Ira Steward, $12 per month during the period of Ira Steward's imprisonment, provided Adell Augusta Steward shall not remarry during the imprisonment of Ira Steward.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALABAMA RIVER RAILROAD BRIDGE.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6119) to authorize the Pensacola, Alabama and Tennessee Railway Company to erect, maintain, and operate a railway bridge across the Alabama River in Wilcox County, in the State of Alabama.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceded to consider the bill; which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 1, on page 1, after the word "and," at the end of line 9, to strike out "said bridge shall not interfere with free navigation of said river" and insert:

If said bridge erected and maintained under the authority of this act shall at any time unreasonably obstruct the free navigation of said river, or shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, unreasonably obstruct such navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction; and such alteration shall be made and all such obstructions be removed at the expense of the owners or operators of said bridge.

So as to make the section read:

That the Pensacola, Alabama and Tennessee Railway Company, a railroad corporation organized under the laws of the States of Florida and Alabama, its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized and empowered to erect, establish, maintain, and operate a railway bridge across the Alabama River at such point in Wilcox County, State of Alabama, as may be by said company selected and approved by the Secretary of War; and if said bridge erected and maintained under the authority of this act shall at any time unreasonably obstruct the free navigation of said river, or shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, unreasonably obstruct such navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction; and such alteration shall be made and all such obstructions be removed at the expense of the owners or operators of said bridge; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to free navigation of said river by reason of the construction of said bridge, the same shall be instituted and determined in the district court of the United States for the southern district of Alabama: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the navigation of rivers, or to exempt this bridge from the operation of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OKLAHOMA, ARIZONA, AND NEW MEXICO.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3560.

Mr. QUAY. I will object to the consideration of that bill for the moment, Mr. President.

Mr. FORAKER. For the moment?

Mr. QUAY. Yes. I wish to give notice that, at the termination of the ordinary routine business to-morrow morning, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of my motion to discharge the Committee on Territories from the further consideration of what is known as the statehood bill. I desire also that the motion shall be corrected on the Calendar to correspond with the original motion as it appears in the RECORD.

I now withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not wish to antagonize the Senator from Pennsylvania in his motion, but I want to remind him that this morning I offered a resolution and suggested that I would make some observations concerning it to-morrow morning. I hope I may be given that privilege, but the Senator and I can arrange the matter between us.

Mr. QUAY. I think we can arrange it.

SAFETY APPLIANCES ON RAILROADS.

Mr. FORAKER. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3560.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 3560) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893, and amended April 1, 1896.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to know if there is a report accompanying that bill? It strikes me that it is a very important one.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say to the Senator that there is a report, and a very able one, too.

Mr. SCOTT. I want to know what the bill is for, if I can have that information.

Mr. FORAKER. It will afford me a great deal of pleasure to comply with the request of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. There is a report accompanying the bill. The bill was considered by the Committee on Insterstate Commerce, and it was unanimously reported by that committee, by whom it was very carefully considered.

Mr. SCOTT. I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, on page 2, line 1, after the date "1893," to insert "as amended April 1, 1896;" and after the words "apply to," at the end of line 2, to strike out:

All trains, locomotives, tenders, cars, or vehicles used in interstate commerce, and in the Territories and the District of Columbia, and to all other locomotives, tenders, cars, or vehicles used in connection therewith.

And insert:

Common carriers by railroads in the Territories and the District of Columbia; and the provisions and requirements hereof and of said acts relating to automatic couplers, grab irons, and the height of drawbars shall be held to apply to all locomotives, tenders, cars, and similar vehicles used on any railroad engaged in interstate commerce, and in the Territories and the District of Columbia, and to all other locomotives, tenders, cars, and similar vehicles used in connection therewith, excepting those trains, cars, and locomotives exempted by the provisions of section 6 of said act of March 2, 1893, as amended by the act of April 1, 1896; and the grab irons or hand holes in the ends of locomotives and tenders shall extend the full length of the end sills thereof, and shall extend upward at least 4 inches clear of any obstruction.

So as to make the section read:

That the provisions and requirements of the act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893, and amended April 1, 1896, shall be held to apply to common carriers by railroads in the Territories and the District of Columbia; and the provisions and requirements hereof and of said acts relating to automatic couplers, grab irons, and the height of drawbars shall be held to apply to all locomotives, tenders, cars, and similar vehicles used on any railroad engaged in interstate commerce, and in the Territories and the District of Columbia, and to all other locomotives, tenders, cars, and similar vehicles used in connection therewith, excepting those trains, cars, and locomotives exempted by the provisions of section 6 of said act of March 2, 1893, as amended by the act of April 1, 1896; and the grab irons or hand holds in the ends of locomotives and tenders shall extend the full length of the end sills thereof, and shall extend upward at least 4 inches clear of any obstruction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, on page 2, line 24, after the word "brakes," to insert "in condition to be operated;" so as to read:

That whenever, as provided for in said act, any car is equipped with train or power brakes in condition to be operated the same shall be used and operated in every train in which such car is hauled.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I trust that amendment will not be agreed to. I am a member of the committee, and I know that the men who have been interested in procuring the preparation and enactment of this bill are very much opposed to the introduction of those words. There are substantial and material reasons why they should not be inserted. I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will not insist on that amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. I myself did not think that the words were very essential, yet there is a difference of opinion about the matter, and to remove that doubt the words were inserted. The provision as amended by the insertion of those words is one relating to the equipment of cars with air brakes. The question is whether or not a car is so equipped when it has an air-brake equipment that is out of order. The committee inserted the words so as to make the provision applicable to cars equipped with air brakes in condition to be operated, so that the operators of the train would not be required to associate cars. This additional requirement is on the ground that they are not equipped unless they are equipped and in order so that they can be used and operated. Representing the committee, I feel bound to insist on the amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I knew that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] did not regard this amendment as material. It is true, as he says, that there is a difference of opinion in the committee upon the subject, but the fear is—and I think it is a well-founded fear—that the words "in condition to be operated," as applied to cars equipped with train or power brakes, might be regarded as a sort of Congressional recognition of the right to associate and use in trains engaged in interstate commerce cars that were equipped but which were out of order.

The section amends the existing law in this respect: As the law exists now railway companies are required to have in each train engaged in interstate-commerce traffic enough of cars equipped with the air brake to enable the engineer to control the speed of the train from his engine without the use of the common, ordinary hand brake. That general provision, which did not specify any number of cars to be used in a train—that is, the cars to be equipped—was found to be insufficient to effect the purpose had in view, and that was the safety of the brakemen and other hands upon freight trains. Therefore it was asked that a certain number of cars should be required, or a certain proportion of cars should be required, to be in each interstate-commerce train equipped with these power or air brakes.

It was first thought that 75 per cent of the cars thus equipped should be contained in each train. It was then agreed that 65 per cent would meet the views of the members of the committee, there being a difference of view in the committee, but when the words "in condition to be operated" were added to the measure, it was feared, and very properly feared, by those who are interested in the matter, that it was a Congressional recognition of the right to use in those trains cars equipped with air brakes that were out of order, and might very materially interfere not only with the safety of those engaged in the operation of those trains, but with their rights in the courts.

It seems to me that the words "in condition to be operated" should be eliminated from the bill, and I hope they will be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, which has been read.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask for a division.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that possibly he had better let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not insist upon his objection, if the result will be to have the bill go over until to-morrow. The Senator must have heard the notice given by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] a few moments ago, that to-morrow he would object to unanimous-consent consideration of any bill, unless his matter was first disposed of, and we do not know when we shall have another opportunity to consider the bill. In view of that statement, inasmuch as this amendment was unanimously agreed to by the committee, inasmuch as the bill has to go to the House, and perhaps to conference, and must be further considered, I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection to the amendment, or at least not insist upon a division, a roll call, or anything of that kind.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not desire to nor would I imperil the passage of the bill. I think it is very important that the bill should be passed, even though there are imperfections in it that might be remedied by a little time and a little consideration; but in view of the status of the Senate upon the subject of unanimous-consent agreements, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, in section 2, on page 3, line 1, after the word "hauled," to insert:

Unless, independently of such car, 65 per cent of the cars in such train are equipped with power or train brakes and are associated together and so used and operated in such train.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That whenever, as provided for in said act, any car is equipped with train or power brakes in condition to be operated the same shall be used and operated in every train in which such car is hauled, unless, independently of such car, 65 per cent of the cars in such train are equipped with power or train brakes and are associated together and so used and operated in such train.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 4, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That the provisions of section 1 of this act shall not take effect until January 1, 1903, and the provisions of section 2 of this act shall not take effect until ninety days after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY J. MOORE.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14206) granting a pension to Mary J. Moore.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary J. Moore, widow of James E. Moore, late of Troop B, Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK J. BURROWS.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1206) for the relief of Frank J. Burrows.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Postmaster-General to cause the account of Frank J. Burrows, late postmaster at Williamsport, Pa., to be credited with the sum of $4,022, being on account of the loss of $3,500 in postage stamps and $522 in postal funds by robbery of the post-office.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDER MURDOCK.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14208) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Murdock.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Alexander Murdock, late of Company B, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CURRY COUNTY, OREG.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3280) for the relief of Curry County, State of Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks present consideration of a bill, which will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. BATE. How much does the bill call for?

Mr. KEAN. Forty-four thousand dollars.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-four thousand dollars.

Mr. BATE. From what committee does it come?

Mr. MITCHELL. From the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BATE. They recommend it, I suppose?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think it ought to be explained somewhat. This is rather an extraordinary bill, it strikes me. The Senator from Oregon perhaps is ready to explain it, or I will ask that the report be read.

Mr. MITCHELL. I can explain it. The county of Curry, in Oregon, is the southwestern county in the State. It is almost a wilderness. There are but 477 votes in the county, with a population of less than 1,900. They were without roads. They went to work, at an expense of $75,000, and constructed a military and post road, connecting the railroads of Oregon with the roads in northern California. It incurred an indebtedness of $44,000 in the construction of the road. It would bankrupt the county to pay the bill. The whole taxable property of the county is less than $500,000. The legislature of the State of Oregon at its last session passed a memorial, which is incorporated in the report, earnestly appealing to Congress to pass the bill. It has expended in all about $75,000, and the amount of the indebtedness outstanding is $44,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon why he speaks of this as a military road.

Mr. MITCHELL. Because it is a military road and because it is a post-road and is used by both departments, the Post-Office and the Military Department, in transporting supplies back and forth. It is a post-road.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is not that true of every road?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is true of a great many roads.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that it retain its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will retain its place on the Calendar.

GEORGE W. EDGINGTON.

Mr. KITTREDGE. On behalf of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KEARNS] I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14042) granting an increase of pension to George W. Edgington.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of George W. Edgington, late of Company H, Eighth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABSOLUM MAYNARD.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me?

Mr. KEAN. I withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to call up the bill (H. R. 6009) granting a pension to Absolum Maynard.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Absolum Maynard, late of Capt. Thomas Damaron's independent company Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. M'LAUGHLIN.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 917) for the relief of John H. McLaughlin.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to John H. McLaughlin, of Fort Randall, S. Dak., for services as custodian of the abandoned Fort Randall Military Reservation, S. Dak., the sum of $1,000 for forty-four and two-thirds months.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED BOYS' BRIGADE OF AMERICA.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator withhold that motion for just a moment?

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from New Jersey has already made such a motion.

Mr. QUAY. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President——

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4426) to authorize the Secretary of War to loan arms to the institutions having companies of the Boys' Brigade connected therewith.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of War to issue, at his discretion and under proper regulations to be prescribed by him, out of ordnance and ordnance stores belonging to the Government, and which can be spared for that purpose, such as may appear to be required by the companies of the District of Columbia Division of the United Boys' Brigades of America, for the purpose of carrying out the principles of physical and military training of the organization; and the Secretary is to require a bond in each case in double the value of the property for the care and safe-keeping and for the return of the same when reqnired.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I renew the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 25, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 24, 1902.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday last, when the Military Academy bill was up for consideration, I voted on the roll call. Subsequently I discovered that I was paired with my colleague from Indiana [Mr. MIERS]. My vote, therefore, was inadvertently cast. I desire this explanation to go into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. This is not a usual statement with reference to a vote, but the gentleman has the benefit of it now.

HOUSE BILLS WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following House bills with Senate amendments thereto. The Senate amendments were read, and, on motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, were concurred in:

H. R. 3323. An act granting a pension to Daniel L. Mallicoat;

H. R. 3500. An act granting an increase of pension to Kate O. Phillips;

H. R. 5315. An act granting an increase of pension to Orrin J. Wells;

H. R. 6871. An act granting an increase of pension to Harman Scramlin;

H. R. 10178. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel Thomas;

H. R. 12284. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Shaw;

H. R. 12299. An act granting a pension to William C. Roberts;

H. R. 12507. An act granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer W. Oakley;

H. R. 12800. An act granting an increase of pension to Horatio N. Whitbeck; and

H. R. 14221. An act granting an increase of pension to Nancy J. McArthur.

JOHN H. LAUCHLY.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8840) granting an increase of pension to John H. Lauchly, and ask for the reading of the statement only.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee calls up a conference report, and asks unanimous consent that the statement alone be read. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It has been printed under the rule, has it?

The SPEAKER. Both the statement and report have been printed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(For conference report see Senate, RECORD of June 16.)

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The bill (H. R. 8840) granting an increase of pension to John H. Lauchly passed the House at $24. The Senate amended the same by striking out $24 and inserting $16.

The result of the conference is that the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agrees to the same, leaving the rate $16 per month.

HENRY R. GIBSON,
RUD. KLEBERG,
S. W. SMITH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GIBSON. I move to agree to the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GIBSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. R. 118. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Arturo R. Calvo, of Costa Rica.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 4556. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws relating to the disposition of lands, etc.," approved March 3, 1901;

H. R. 13650. An act to correct the military record of James M. Olmstead;

H. R. 14111. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River in the State of Tennessee by the Harriman Southern Railroad Company; and

H. R. 14691. An act to authorize the construction of a pontoon bridge across the Missouri River in the County of Cass, in the State of Nebraska, and in the county of Mills, in the State of Iowa.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment a bill of the House of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 10933. An act to provide for the erection at Fredericksburg, Va., of the monument to the memory of Gen. Hugh Mercer, which it was ordered by Congress on the 8th day of April, 1777, should be erected.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1026) to fix the compensation of district superintendents in the Life-Saving Service.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12804) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives the enrolled copy of the bill (S. 5718) providing for the sale of sites for manufacturing or industrial plants in the Indian Territory, and requests the House of Representatives to vacate the action of the Speaker in signing said enrolled bill, and to return said enrolled bill and the message of the Senate agreeing to the amendment of the House of Representatives to said bill to the Senate.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, joint resolutions of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

S. R. 113. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cannon for a monument to the soldiers of Worcester County, Mass., who served in the war for the Union, to be surmounted by an equestrian statue of the late Maj. Gen. Charles Deven, United States Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. R. 118. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point, Arturo R. Calvo, of Costa Rica—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NACO, ARIZ., SUBPORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. SHOWALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2848.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 2848) for the establishment of a subport of entry at Naco, Ariz.

Be it enacted, etc., That Naco, in the district of Arizona, Territory of Arizona, shall be established a subport of entry, and a deputy collector shall be appointed, who shall reside at said subport of entry and receive such compensation as the Secretary of the Treasury may allow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHOWALTER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PERMANENT INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION OF THE CONGRESSES OF NAVIGATION.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3651) appropriating the sum of $3,000 a year for the support and maintenance of the permanent international commission of the congresses of navigation, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $3,000 a year is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support and maintenance of the permanent international commission of the congresses of navigation and for the payment of the actual expenses of the properly accredited national delegates of the United States to the meetings of the congresses and of the commission; and that the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to draw his warrant each year upon the Secretary of the Treasury for such sum, not to exceed $3,000, as may in his opinion be proper to apply to the purposes above mentioned, and that the said sum shall be disbursed under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

The national delegates aforesaid from the United States shall serve without compensation, but shall be reimbursed for their actual expenses incurred while traveling to and from the meetings, and while in attendance thereon, from the funds herein appropriated and authorized to be expended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear an explanation of this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to appropriate $3,000 for the support and maintenance of the permanent international commission of the congresses of navigation. This bill has a unanimous report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and also the earnest approval of the three departments—the State, War, and Treasury.

Mr. PAYNE. What is the necessity for it?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The first congress of this kind that was ever held was held at Brussels in 1885. The last congress was held at Paris in 1900, and in late years great interest has been taken in these congresses, and the scope of inquiry and investigation has broadened and increased. The object and purpose of this international congress is that when the delegates assemble they discuss questions of importance relating to navigation, hydraulics and electrical engineering as applied to the navigation of rivers and harbors, and kindred subjects. The delegates meet from all nations, comprising the most prominent engineers in the world, and discuss the matters and subjects I have mentioned. Their discussions as reported are of very great value in their practical and scientific suggestions, and great benefit has already been realized from the discussions in these international congresses.

Mr. PAYNE. How has the expense been paid heretofore?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No expense has been incurred heretofore. The delegates attending the last international commission paid their own expenses. The discussions which take place in this International Congress of Navigation have become of such great importance that the Secretary of the Treasury has made this report, and it has the unanimous indorsement of the Secretary of State and the Secretary of War. The bill simply proposes to pay the actual personal expenses of the delegates of our country to this International Congress of Navigation. I feel confident that if this commission receives the support that it so eminently deserves our people will realize great benefit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STATISTICS RELATING TO IRRIGATION.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 182, authorizing the Director of the Census to compile the statistics relating to irrigation.

Resolved, etc., That the Director of the Census be, and hereby is, authorized and directed, upon the completion of the volume of agricultural statistics, the year 1899, to complete and bring up to date of the crop year of 1902 the statistics relating to irrigation, the area of land reclaimed, the cost and value of the works, and such other information as can be obtained bearing upon the present condition of irrigation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if this measure has been considered by the Committee on Census and reported?

Mr. TONGUE. It has been considered by the committee and unanimously reported, and has the recommendation of the Geological Survey and the approval of the Census Department. I understand that they have practically all this data, but no authority to publish them in the census reports; and that is practically all that is sought to be obtained by this resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why is not there authority to publish this information now?

Mr. TONGUE. I do not understand the reasons, but I understand that is the fact.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. You say that the data has already been gathered?

Mr. TONGUE. The data has been substantially gathered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

REGULAR TERM OF DISTRICT COURT AT ROANOKE CITY.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12648) establishing a regular term of United States district court in Roanoke city.

Be it enacted, etc., That a regular term of the district court of the United States for the western district of Virginia shall be held in each year in the city of Roanoke, Va., on the second Monday in February.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That hereafter the circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Virginia shall be held each year at Danville on the Tuesday after the second Monday in April and November; at Lynchburg on the Tuesday after the second Monday in March and September; at Abingdon on the Tuesday after the first Monday in May and October; at Harrisonburg on the Tuesday after the first Monday in June and December; at Charlottesville on the second Monday in January, and at Roanoke City on the second Monday in February.

"SEC. 2. That in the western district of Virginia the clerk of the circuit and district courts at Lynchburg shall appoint two deputy clerks, each of whom shall be deputy clerk both of the circuit and district courts, and one of whom shall reside and keep his office in the city of Charlottesville, and the other in the city of Roanoke, for the purpose, in said respective cities, of taking charge and custody of the court records and papers, attending the sessions of the said courts, issuing all proper process, and discharging all the clerical duties in connection with the business of said courts.

"SEC. 3. That the marshal for the western district of Virginia shall discharge all the duties of marshal in connection with the business of said courts at Charlottesville and Roanoke.

"SEC. 4. That this act shall be in force from and after its passage."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to establish a regular term of United States district court in Roanoke City, Va., and for other purposes."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman, reserving the right to object, is this amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. SWANSON. It was reported unanimously by the Judiciary Committee of the House.

Mr. PAYNE. It is very unusual to appoint deputy clerks to reside at the different places where the district court is held, and I do not understand the reason.

Mr. SWANSON. The bill originally passed the House simply providing for the holding of a district court at Roanoke City.

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose that was for the purpose of getting the public building?

Mr. SWANSON. No; Roanoke already has a public building.

Mr. PAYNE. A court-house?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; it has a court-house. It made no provision for the deputy clerks of the district and circuit courts.

Mr. PAYNE. This is unusual, and makes an extra expense.

Mr. SWANSON. There is a deputy clerk at Lynchburg, and this creates no new expense, because the salaries are paid by the fees of the office. It is the usual method at these other courts, and this simply provides for a deputy at this city. There is no additional expense by it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SWANSON. I move to concur in the Senate amendments and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments, and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SWANSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in was laid on the table.

FISH HATCHERY IN MARYLAND.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2082) to establish a fish hatchery and fish station in the State of Maryland.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Illinois.

MONUMENT TO GEN. HUGH MERCER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10933) to provide for the erection at Fredericksburg, Va., of the monument to the memory of Gen. Hugh Mercer, which it was ordered by Congress on the 8th day of April, 1777, should be erected, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the members of the House that I gave notice yesterday that I would call up the conference report on the naval appropriation bill this morning, but at the urgent request of the chairman of the committee and others I have consented not to call it up until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I want to give notice that I shall call up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill to-morrow morning.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged resolution, House resolution No. 284, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt about this privilege superseding the pending order, so that it will be considered if there is no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, and the House will resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Senate bill 2295.

PHILIPPINE GOVERNMENT.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 2295, with Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts in the chair.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL].

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, Charles Dickens was the most wonderful character delineator the world has ever produced. He had the power as no other man ever had of drawing a character which should stand as a type for a whole class of society. Perhaps the most skillfully drawn character ever depicted by Dickens was that of Pecksniff. In fact, so skillfully is the character of Pecksniff drawn, that he stands as a composite picture of hypocrites everywhere. One is left in doubt after reading the book and studying the character as to whether or not Dickens intended us to believe that Pecksniff was such an accomplished hypocrite that by long practice he succeeded in deceiving even himself.

I am inclined to think that the latter fact is correct, and to-day the Pecksniffs—that is, the disciples of Pecksniff—have their prototype in the Republican leaders of thought, and I, out of abounding charity, which is one of my distinguishing characteristics, am prepared to believe that they have reached the point where they have succeeded in deceiving themselves. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, in proof of this fact I propose to take up a few public questions in the time at my disposal and attempt to demonstrate the truth of my proposition. There is the RECIPROCITY QUESTION.

For weeks that matter has been hanging, like Mahomet's coffin, between earth and heaven. The daily press—the Republican press—has pictured the President of the United States as anxious for reciprocity with Cuba. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee caused this Hall to resound a few weeks ago with a picture of the woes of Cuba, and of our plain duty to give Cuba reciprocity.

The President of the United States, after the bill had passed the House with the vote of all the Democrats and nearly all the Republicans here, has sent another message to Congress, and the press of the country has held up the beet-sugar Senators to scorn and obloquy as an impediment to the relief of Cuba, and as an impediment to the discharge of our duty and the reduction of the tariff rates between Cuba and this country.

Let us see, Mr. Chairman, if that be true. The beet-sugar people, whether right or wrong, have stood up in defense of an industry that was promised to be fostered by the Republican party. They voted in accordance with their party platform, and from their standpoint to protect an agricultural product. They did, however, vote to remove the protection to the "sugar trust." The House of Representatives passed the Cuban reciprocity bill, shorn of the differential in favor of that trust, by the solid Democratic vote here aided by many Republicans. Weeks ago that bill went over to the Senate in a form to give Cuba relief and save to the people of the United States $20,000,000 annually in the consumption of sugar. All this talk about the bravery and fidelity of the President in discharging a duty to Cuba is pure, unadulterated, Pecksniffian buncombe. Why? Because every member of this House and every Senator knows that if the President of the United States desired Cuban reciprocity above protecting the sugar trust, all he has to do is to dissolve the firm of Havemeyer, Roosevelt, Wood, Root, Thurber & Co., and go into partnership with the American people and a majority in Congress will give Cuba reciprocity and strike down the "sugar trust." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

A single message from the President of the United States, instead of rejecting the rebate plan, instead of telling us that this schedule ought not to apply to other countries—a single line from him saying that he is willing to surrender the protection to the sugar trust and when he strikes a blow at the agricultural interests of this country, he is willing to let the sugar monopoly go down unprotected—and we will furnish him, for the 19 Republican recalcitrants, a solid Democratic vote in the Senate; and if those 35 Republican Senators who are laboring with the 19 beet-sugar recalcitrants, will give us 20 of their votes in favor of an honest effort to give this country reciprocity with Cuba, we will pass a bill here before Congress adjourns that will save the American people annually $20,000,000, keep our faith with Cuba, and give us reciprocity—not with the sugar trust, but with the Cuban people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

No; they prefer to let reciprocity fail before the "sugar trust" shall be touched. Such conduct makes me doubtful of the sincerity of certain people, and that is why I took Pecksniff as my text this morning. The press of the country is upholding him and insisting that the President is sincere, and yet when exposure comes, we find what? We find that Governor-General Wood, our military officer in command of Cuba, with the approval of that great warrior, Secretary Root, and with the full knowledge of the President of the United States, has gone into the Cuban treasury and looted it for the purpose of carrying on a propaganda here among the "leaders of public thought." We found more—that he not only did that, but there comes to the front one of the most notorious lobbyists that ever infested the halls of this Capitol, as the joint agent of our highest officials and Mr. Havemeyer, the sugar trust's president, in order to carry out this propaganda.

Now, then, "let us be honest." Every man here knows—no man dare deny it—that if you are willing to let the sugar trust go to the wall, so that the American consumers will get the benefit of the reduction of duty, we can speedily pass reciprocity with Cuba. That is all the President has got to do. And I want at least that much to go out in this debate to the people and to the country, because the responsility should rest where it belongs. It rests upon the President of the United States, and no honest man can deny it. So much for reciprocity.

THEN THERE IS THE TARIFF QUESTION.

Everybody knows that when this Congress assembled the chairman of the Republican campaign committee came here with a flourish of trumpets, proclaiming that the trusts of this country had outgrown the need of protection. He announced his purpose to introduce bills here to give the taxpayers of this country relief, to strike down exorbitant protection to the great industries that are selling their products abroad at a figure much lower than the price to home people. The astute member from Ohio [General DICK] stated in a Republican caucus that certain steel goods could be shipped abroad from here, brought back and the tariff paid, and these American goods carried back to Ohio, at a price less than the people could order them for direct from Pittsburg.

The Republican majority had to reorganize the Ways and Means Committee to prevent striking a blow at the great steel and other trusts in this country by reducing the tariff. And the chairman of the Congressional campaign committee, in an interview on yesterday, had the hardihood to say that the Republican party had redeemed all its pledges to the country and was willing to go before the country on its record.

Then, Mr. Chairman, there are

THE TRUSTS.

In the closing hours of the Fifty-sixth Congress there rang the clarion voice of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] for three hours here, showing the necessity of legislation to suppress the trusts. We had the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] declaring that all the legislation that had ever been put on the statute books to restrain the trusts had been put there by the Republican party, and that they were bringing in this bill in an honest effort to meet the defects in the law after the Supreme Court opinion upon the Sherman Act was handed down.

That was to tide over the election of 1900. You brought in that measure a few hours before Congress adjourned and sent it over to the cemetery at the other end of the Capitol to sleep the sleep of all good and just bills when the Republican party wants to tide over a national or a Congressional campaign.

What do you say about trusts now?

Mr. OLMSTED rose.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I will yield in a moment.

Why, sir, in his Minneapolis speech the President of the United States, just as he had promised to put the canal thieves behind prison bars in New York, said that the Republican party would "put shackles upon their cunning." Yet when he comes here he gives Congress a tip and refers to these men, who ought to be outlawed as public enemies, as the "great captains of industry."

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman wants to know what we say about the trusts. I ask the gentleman whether he has read what Mr. Bryan has said about the "Democratic harmony plan" of denouncing trusts——

Mr. BALL of Texas. I decline to yield to the gentleman, who has not propounded a pertinent question. If there is anyone on that side desiring to propound pertinent questions, I will yield to him.

Mr. LESSLER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LESSLER].

Mr. BALL of Texas. No, sir; I decline to yield. I do not believe he can. [Laughter.]

Mr. LESSLER. "Praise from Sir Hubert is praise indeed."

Mr. BALL of Texas. Now, I have only thirty minutes. If I am granted twenty minutes' additional I should be glad to answer any question that gentlemen wish to ask.

Mr. OLMSTED. It will take you longer than that.

Mr. BALL of Texas. It might take you longer than that. In your defense of the Committee on Rules, your attack upon the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN] gave him a campaign document that he ought to have paid you to edit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further. I say that the trusts of this country have outgrown any claim for protection even from the Republican standpoint, and the Republican party has proved itself a Pecksniff by pretending in the last Congress the desire to pass any legislation to strike down the trusts which since the passage of the "Dingley bill" have consolidated into corporations capitalized at more than $12,000,000,000 and which are effacing individual effort, stifling competition, regulating the wages of labor, and fixing the price to the consumer.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BALL of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would ask the gentleman what his remedy is for the trust evil?

Mr. BALL of Texas. The trust evil, in my judgment, can be absolutely wiped out by putting all the products of the trusts upon the free list, by denying them the privilege of having their goods transported from one State to another State, and by refusing them the use of the United States mails. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Also, by having an Administration that will resort to penal statutes and not to injunctions against one trust, by consent, to restrain them from something that they say they are not doing. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then the proposition is free trade?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Pass your bill.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Yes; pass your bill. Why does not the gentleman advocate it? The gentleman said it was a good thing in 1900.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. One moment——

Mr. BALL of Texas. I decline to yield.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, very well.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Well, I have only twenty minutes, and the gentleman never undertakes to speak for less than three hours, and I can not get as much time as that. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman never heard anybody here objecting to his speaking three hours.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Yes; over on your side.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BALL of Texas. Oh, I know the gentleman would be glad to hear me. Go ahead.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, I simply say that the proposition of the gentleman comes down to the question of free trade.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Now, the gentleman is making a speech.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does it not?

Mr. BALL of Texas. I am for free trade in everything that is controlled by trusts. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. How about sugar? Is the gentleman in favor of free trade for sugar?

Mr. BALL of Texas. I am in favor of free trade for sugar when the American consumers get free trade on the manufactured products of this country as well as on the products of the farmers.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is not sugar controlled by a trust?

Mr. BALL of Texas. Yes; and I am in favor of wiping out the differential, as the gentleman voted. Strike it off, and then the trust will no longer control it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, the differential——

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will have to decline to yield further. If the gentleman will stand by the bill that he helped pass, that will strike a blow at the sugar trust, so that Mr. Havemeyer will not be able to contribute to the joint lobbyist employed by himself and the Administration.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What does the gentleman mean? The amendment to the Sherman antitrust law?

Mr. BALL of Texas. No.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. My bill?

Mr. BALL of Texas. I mean the Cuban reciprocity bill that passed this House and on which I had the honor to follow the leadership of the distinguished gentleman from Maine.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, I did not vote for the bill.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Yes, but the gentleman voted to strike off the differential.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes, I voted to strike off the differential, but I did not vote for the bill.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I must decline to yield any more. I do not care to be interrupted by a gentleman who exhausted three hours in 1900 showing the necessity for trust legislation, and who has not the nerve to come out now and advocate his own bill. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] Now, there is another little matter that I desire to call to the attention of the House. I know there is no use of appealing to the cocained conscience of the Republican party. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

However, I would like to have the country understand that party in all of its nakedness, as it ought to be shown. Take the question of the Territories. In 1896 you promised them admission as States. In 1900 you promised them admission as States, in the Republican platform. The bill admitting them has passed here and has gone over to the Senate, where all good bills are buried until after the election is over, when the Republican Administration so determines, and the gentleman from Indiana, the distinguished, precocious, and versatile Senator, who went over to the Philippine Islands and solved in two weeks the great problem of absorbing alien races, says they have not time enough to take up the Territories bill in the Senate; that the bill has been before his committee for only five weeks.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman to order for referring to what took place in the Senate.

Mr. BALL of Texas. This did not take place in the Senate. It took place over in the Philippine Islands. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Outside of the Constitution.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. BALL of Texas. This was not said in the Senate. I got it out of the newspapers, out of a reliable Republican newspaper, the Evening Star. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman got it out of the newspaper, then it was said in the Senate.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Then I am sorry, and I will apologize for the gentleman making the statement, for attempting to hoodwink the American people by making them believe that after the Republican party has promised for eight years to give the Territories statehood they have not time at this session to consider the bill. Now, then, there is another proposition which the distinguished chairman of the Insular Affairs Committee says is an American problem, not a Democratic problem, not a Republican problem; and yet, Mr. Chairman, the Pecksniffian school is on top in the Republican party in the handling of that grave question. I refer, of course, to—

THE PHILIPPINE QUESTION.

Four years ago the cries of the oppressed Cubans reached the ears of our people, taught from infancy to love liberty and hate tyranny. Then no one dreamed that this country could ever be induced to turn from "the path our fathers trod" and enter upon our present course of conduct. The horrible concentration camps in Cuba, the merciless orders and mode of warfare of Weyler, and the starvation, disease, and death which stalked abroad throughout that unhappy isle produced a condition of affairs that, in the language of President McKinley, "could not longer be tolerated." Proclaiming to the world that the Cubans "ought to be free and independent," and that it was not our purpose to take land or territory, believing, as was well said by Mr. McKinley, that "forcible annexation under our code of morals was criminal aggression and could not be tolerated," we went to war with Spain and loudly boasted that we had done what no other country in all the ages had ever done, engaged in war at a great sacrifice of blood and treasure for the sake alone of liberty and humanity. We won upon land and sea a glorious victory, and Spain was at our feet in ninety days.

Thus far all was honor and our good name and fame untarnished. Dewey in Manila Bay, guarding the harbor and standing sentinel over the hulls of the Spanish ships, was without land forces and 7,000 miles from our shores. Our consular representatives and Commodore Dewey invoked the aid of Aguinaldo and the Filipinos to join forces against the common enemy. Then came the treaty of peace negotiated at Paris, in the negotiation of which the Filipinos were denied audience and our future policy left uncertain. Then came the outbreak of hostilities between our troops and their late allies, the Filipinos; and the end is not yet.

Thus the war begun against Spain for high and holy purpose in Cuba has been sunk to the level of the Spanish régime. Nay, worse, Spain at least was fighting her rebellious subjects, no matter how just the cause for their rebellion. Spain was exercising a force never denied to monarchies, while we went to war with our allies who owed us no allegiance, but occupied the same relations to us that Lafayette, Rochambeau, De Grasse, and the French troops occupied to our revolutionary sires. Had we been as true to them as the French were to us, had we but declared our purpose then to give them the freedom we had promised the Cubans, the frightful results of our present policy would have been avoided. The representatives of this Republic some day might have carried to the Filipino republic a statue to Admiral Dewey, and ceremonies been had like unto those which recently transpired in this city when the statue of Rochambeau was unveiled upon Lafayette Square.

Instead of that, we are seeking to annex the Philippine Archipelago by force and govern them without their consent under the hypocritical pretense of carrying the blessings of liberty and civilization to them or dosing out to them from time to time, in the language of President Roosevelt, "all the liberty for which they are fit," following a pretended duty which Mr. Roosevelt termed a few years back "the piratical doctrine of manifest destiny."

The Republican party is in fact guided alone by the bony fingers of greed and avarice, and is bent on the exploitations of the islands because "they love liberty less than they love gold."

Now, whenever we rise here to say anything against the outrageous policy which is changing the whole system and theory of our Government, up jumps a Republican member to remind us, as an answer to our proposition, of the fact that William J. Bryan advocated the ratification of the treaty. Yes, and when he did it the Republican Speaker of this House, Mr. Reed, the present Speaker of this House, the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], and all the Republican leaders openly proclaimed that it was not their purpose permanently to annex the Philippine Islands. And Mr. Bryan made the mistake of believing that a Republican statesman would "stay put" in the same place for any length of time. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

You did not fool Senator HOAR, because he has associated with you too long. [Laughter and applause.] You did not fool some of the other Republican leaders, and you drove Thomas B. Reed out of public life; but you ought to have the frankness to say that when Mr. Bryan advocated the ratification of the treaty, he also advocated that at the same time the Bacon amendment promising them freedom should also be adopted. You know how that treaty was secured. You know that one Senator from the South had a resolution passed through by the Republicans declaring it to be their purpose not to incorporate the Philippine Islands, and you got his vote. You know that another Senator from the South, a Democrat who had a few days before thundered with borrowed thunder against the bulwarks of imperialism, was secured to vote for that measure, and became the Republican referee for the distribution of spoils in one of the Southern States.

You know that another distinguished Democratic Senator who was against the policy was made a member of the Commission to negotiate the Paris treaty, and he is now a Federal judge in one of the Eastern States; and yet you say that Mr. Bryan did it all. Well, if he did it, he did it because he believed that there was enough of Abraham Lincoln left in the Republican party to make them do justice to an alien people struggling for land and liberty. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I did not have that confidence, thank God, but it is not to Mr. Bryan's discredit. It was only his judgment that was at fault, and his lack of knowledge of the Pecksniffian vein that runs through a great deal of human nature.

Mr. TAWNEY. On both sides of the House.

Mr. BALL of Texas. The gentleman from Minnesota says on both sides of the House; but at least upon this policy on this side there has been no uncertain sound, and the gentleman from Minnesota knows very well that there is not a Democrat in this House who, either upon the question of the trusts, the tariff, or the Philippine questions, has justified the statement which he made, doubtless in a spirit of levity.

Mr. GRIGGS. Why not accept his plea of guilty?

Mr. BALL of Texas. I disclaim it for this side, but I accept his plea for his associates. He has no right, however, to plead guilty for us, because we were his late allies in trying to wipe out the sugar trust differential. And now there is another thing. When we come here and venture in all candor to discuss the disgraceful scenes that have been enacted over in the Philippine Islands you gentlemen charge us with slandering the Army. We do not believe that there is any sanctity about a brass button or a blue uniform unless within that uniform and behind that button there be an honest heart and a brave, manly nature. Wrong is wrong, whether done by a private individual or by a soldier. The occurrences in the Philippine Islands have been the natural consequences of taking men educated in a different school of thought into a war that violates all their former teachings.

The first note in this House was heard from the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY], who presided over the last Republican convention in Pennsylvania. His denunciation of the orders of General Smith were made in terms more eloquent than any of us may hope to equal, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] shrank back from their enormity and avowed his belief that no such orders had ever been issued. And yet, General Smith himself has admitted the truth. We could hope to add nothing to the picture drawn by Senator HOAR. We do, however, denounce the policy of the War Department in suppressing information which this Congress is entitled to have. The Commanding General of the Army has complained of the manner in which the war is being conducted in the Philippine Islands only to be rebuked by the President, who has ignored Dewey and pronounced Admiral Schley a coward and a falsifier.

There is no question but that you have a different rule over there for privates and officers. A private was shot for the same offense that an officer was reduced thirty lines in rank and then restored to his command. When the letter of Private Weir escaped from the files of the War Department, it transpired that six months before General Miles had recommended that Lieutenant Arnold and all the others engaged in the terrible conduct should be court-martialed. And when the exposure came Secretary of War Root took belated action, but ordered another investigation for the lieutenant and a court-martial for all the privates. When the letters come home from the private soldiers exposing the doings in the Philippine Islands, General Otis says that "it is well known that private soldiers are in the habit of drawing the long bow," and General Funston says "they are writing home a pack of lies." If you are hunting for slanders upon the Army, go to these officers who have thus slandered the private soldiers who do but their bidding in the Far East. Not satisfied with charging us thus falsely in order to justify and excuse the conduct of the war in the Philippine Islands, many are found who do not scruple to revive the bitter memories of the civil war.

Like ghouls, like hyenas, you go down into the graves of the past and slander the gallant armies of the North and the South by attempting to make the people of this country believe that they were guilty of the foul and atrocious acts that have been committed in the Philippine Islands. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In the name of the two greatest armies that were ever placed on the field of battle, either of which could have whipped any army in the world except the one against which it fought, I resent your calumnies as slanders upon both. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am not going to bandy words with the small characters who see fit to pursue this policy. We are not going to fight the civil war over again. There is nothing in that record of which we of the South are ashamed; we have taken the advice of Robert E. Lee when Grant gave him magnanimous terms of surrender at Appomattox. When he sheathed his stainless sword our chieftain said: "Go home and teach your children that we are one country now."

Abraham Lincoln was great enough to stand upon Gettysburg's blood-crimsoned heights and ask that he be pointed out the landscape over which Pickett's division made its immortal charge and say, "I am proud to be the countryman of the men who made this charge." [Applause.] What care we for Lilliputians? We prefer a pilgrimage to the bedside of the great captain-general of the Union Army at Mount McGregor, and his husky whisper, "Let us have peace," has swelled into a glorious symphony throughout all the South, not to be disturbed by the revilings and littleness of very, very small men. [Applause.] "The mystic chords of memory," which Abraham Lincoln prophesied would, "when again touched by the better angels of our nature, swell the chorus of the Union," have long ago been attuned to that music in the Southland. They were smote upon with might in the heart of President McKinley when he stood upon a Southern battlefield and declared that "the bravery and chivalry of the armies of the North and South were the glorious and common heritage of a reunited country." While you who dishonor the memory of Lincoln, Grant, and McKinley by dragging the war between the States into this controversy disclaim any such purpose, in your hearts you know that it is an effort to obtain a mean and partisan advantage and to stir up sectional strife. For such methods we entertain unutterable contempt.

When you say that the orders of General Smith to burn, refuse quarters to prisoners, make of Samar a howling wilderness, and kill all over 10 years of age; when you say that the tortures by the water cure and peeling the skin from helpless victims has any parallel in the war between the States, you slander the two armies, North and South, and the American people will not sustain you. [Applause.] You bomb-proof stay-at-homes, who are sending others to fight under tropical suns, while you remain upon this side of the water, can not by tributes to the flag and the boys in blue escape responsibility thereby. Your selfishness will not be rewarded even by the gains to trade which you have anticipated. Why? China, with her 400,000,000 people, buys less from the world by one-half than Great Britain alone buys from us.

Japan is already becoming a factor with which we will have to reckon. China has vast possibilities in mineral resources and for the raising of wheat and cotton. Her people are peculiarly adapted to the manufacture of textiles and all articles requiring skill and patience. The labor there in cotton factories is paid less per month than we pay a day. They can live upon one-twentieth of what an American laborer can live. The Philippine Islands are adapted to the raising of cotton, sugar, rice, tobacco, and other products which are raised here. General Hughes tells us that American laborers can not live in that climate, that the Filipinos themselves will never develop the islands, and that the only labor that is available is Japanese and Chinese, and that you can not keep the Chinese out.

With capitalists opening up vast agricultural interests in China and the Philippine Islands, with the sleeping millions of China aroused to industrial activity, you will find our agricultural products abroad confronted with the agricultural products produced by the cheapest labor in the world. Nay, more, you will find our manufacturing interests met abroad by competition from manufacturing plants there and compelled to struggle at home with such a competition. The Philippine Islands will afford a breeding ground from which cheap labor will be brought here to compete with our own labor. When we talk about trade with those countries, it must mean an exchange of products, as they have no money worth speaking of, and in such a contest the American citizen must "go to the wall." The raw cotton of the South can be taken to such a market and brought back as the finished prduct cheaper than we can make it at home.

When we oppose a policy that threatens commercial disaster to us, we are charged with opposition to expansion. The Democratic party has always been a party of expansion. Every foot of soil fitted for the habitation of white men that has been added to the original thirteen colonies has come to us under Democratic Administrations. But every foot of that soil was contiguous, suited to our wants, and in line with our best interests. There the best of American citizenship, the lawyer, doctor, preacher, farmer, or mechanic, could go from the crowded centers of population to a sparsely settled section and find opportunity under a sun congenial to Anglo-Saxon blood, make his home, rear his family, and worship God as his conscience impelled him.

The Philippine Islands can never be thus Americanized. By such a policy we abandon the Monroe doctrine and the mission of our Republic. True to that mission, we have seen flag after flag go down upon monarchial holdings upon this continent to give way to liberty-loving republics. From the throes of the civil war we emerged, waved our hand at an emperor seeking a throne in Mexico, and his aspirations vanished. We have just wrested from Spain the last of her possessions upon this hemisphere. Not only that, but our institutions have invaded Europe, and where republics have not supplanted despotisms kings and emperors have been compelled to surrender to their subjects many privileges and concessions. Instead of embarking upon a policy of colonial aggrandizement, had we but been true to ourselves and the memory of those who established this great Republic, by the sheer force of our example and the influence of our institutions we might, and may yet, if we have the courage to return to them, "command the peace and shape the civilization of the world." [Applause.]

I am not going to discuss the capacity of the Filipinos for self-government. I believe that every people are capable of giving themselves a better and more satisfactory government than that of any alien government forced upon them against their consent. If the testimony of many is to be believed, they are capable of self-government. If they are, they are entitled to have it. If they are not, then they are not fit for citizenship and ought not to be added to our people as a degradation of the high standard of citizenship we have heretofore had. We can not govern them as subjects and hope to preserve our own Government in its integrity. Solicitude for the welfare of our own people is far more potent than regard for the interests of the Filipinos in shaping my opposition to any policy looking to their retention. Gentlemen say that it will embarrass us to make them any promises of freedom, even though it be our intention to give them ultimate independence. Our experience in Cuba is the answer to that question.

Now, then, I want to say briefly in conclusion that we began the war with Spain in the name of liberty and humanity; not our own liberty, but that of the Cubans, and the blood and treasure sacrificed in that cause is an honor to every American citizen, North, South, East, and West. We gave the Cubans their liberty when we were under no such obligation to them as we were to the Filipinos, whose alliance we courted and who, when Manila was invested and surrounded, occupied with their lines 7 miles around that beleaguered city, while the American troops held less than one-half a mile. Gentlemen here that wish to indulge in technical quibbles like criminal lawyers may attempt to show that there was no definite promise made by Dewey or our consular representatives to give the Filipinos their land and liberty. I care not whether any soldier, sailor, or agent in the service of the United States made such a promise or not. When we joined hands with them against a common foe to win a common victory, common morals, common decency, and common honesty required that we should not turn upon them and despoil them of their country.

I shall not indulge in controversy as to who fired the first shot or what caused the war. I believe the first shot was fired by one of our own soldiers. Be that as it may, we all know that hostilities in the Philippine Islands were caused by the determination of a Republican Administration to annex by force the Philippine Islands without the consent of the people. That was the origin of the war, and you know that not a drop of blood would have been shed in the Philippine Islands had we kept the faith and promised them that when order was restored and a stable government established we would withdraw the land and naval forces of the United States. Every trade advantage could have been secured thereby and their friendship retained through the years to come. You gentlemen talk about a policy of "scuttle." If by that word "scuttle" you mean sinking a ship, I tell you if I could, I would bore a thousand holes in your ship of "Imperialism," sink her to the depth of perdition, and board again the old "ship of state" that has carried us thus far on our road to grandeur and glory. If by "scuttle" you mean to "hurry away," let me tell you that the more quickly we escape from your present policy the more certain will be the safety of our own country and our institutions. [Applause.]

You have cost this country already by your policy more than $600,000,000; you have increased the expenses of the Army and Navy from $54,000,000 in 1896 to more than $200,000,000 in 1902. You send brave men to incur disease, suffer death, and come home manacled in transports and cars, while maniacal shrieks proclaim reason overthrown and inability to discern under what flag they fought. You will add millions to our pension roll. The blood and health of thousands, the treasure spent in this unhappy war, are upon the head of the Republican party. You have violated our traditions, dishonored our history, and perverted the spirit and genius of a liberty-loving government to one of oppression and despotic power. You have recognized both slavery and polygamy in the islands you covet. You are crushing out a people who fought as our allies in the Far East and who are battling for the boon our forefathers wrested from Great Britain. You are establishing crown colonies over 10,000,000 people 7,000 miles from our shore, where the Declaration of American Independence can not be read except with solemn mockery. [Loud applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS].

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KERN], in an address delivered on the floor of this House a few days ago, used these words:

> I have not met a soldier yet who has returned from the Philippine Islands, who was not looking for a Government job or some other sort of governmental favor, who had one word of commendation or approval for our policy in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. Chairman, I have met such a soldier. I met him, and I attended his funeral in the little city in which I live the latter part of last October. It seemed to those of us who had known him and had seen him grow from childhood that he was but a boy, and such in truth and fact he was. But he was a "regular." He served with the Fourth Cavalry. His father was a Michigan soldier, and from him the son inherited the divine spark. He ran away from school to enlist, left his books to go to war. It was the same old story in which is written so much of our nation's glory. He was with Schwan, with Lawton, and with Young all through the Luzon. He came back with his regiment to be mustered out the following spring. His health was so poor he was furloughed from Jefferson Barracks, Mo., in order that he might return to his home in Delphi, Ind.

I was at the train when he arrived. I saw him drag his poor, emaciated body from the car and, half supported by his old friends and neighbors, stagger across the platform and fall into the arms of his mother. He lived just one month and then he died. It was a beautiful day when we laid him away in the cemetery overlooking the valley. Thousands of people attended his funeral. Hundreds of them stood under the trees, beautiful in their autumnal foliage, while the sad and solemn service progressed. His former schoolmates were his pallbearers, and his casket was draped in a beautiful American flag. In the evening, just as the sun left us to give light to those people for whom he gave his life, we buried his poor remains from the sight of men forever.

Mr. Chairman, Oliver Cockrane did not come home expecting to receive a Government job. Oliver Cockrane did not come home expecting to receive any sort of governmental favor. Oliver Cockrane did indorse the policy of his country in the Philippine Islands. I talked with him a score of times during that month and he told me he indorsed it. He said if there was one objection he would make to that policy it was that his country was too humane, too gentle, and it was that it did not visit to a greater degree upon those people the heavy hand of its authority.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to ask him a question. I understood him in the beginning of his speech to refer to the gentleman from Illinois, but I did not understand the name of the gentleman.

Mr. LANDIS. I quoted from Mr. KERN. A few days before this soldier died, as I was sitting in his room, he turned his face toward me, and, with his great eyes illumined with patriotic fire, he said: "We soldiers who have served in the Philippine Islands do not want to have it said in years to come that we followed a retreating flag." [Applause on the Republican side.]

"We soldiers who served in the Philippine Islands do not want to have it said in years to come that we followed a retreating flag." There is more eloquence, there is more patriotism, there is more philosophy in that single sentence than in all the utterances of the anti-imperialists since the first shot was fired in Manila Bay, May 1, 1898. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And they will not have it said in years to come that they followed a retreating flag. [Applause.] We have heard it said on this floor that the American flag has retreated; that it retreated from Tripoli. I deny it. It performed its mission in Tripoli and then passed on. [Applause.] And murder and rapine and piracy along the Mediterranean became a reminiscence. We have heard it said that it retreated from Mexico. I deny it. It performed its mission in Mexico and passed on. That triumphant march from the Rio Grande to the City of Mexico was the timely chastisement that dignity and decency gave to arrogance and impudence, and it has been ever since an inspiration to that people.

We have been told that our flag retreated from Cuba. I deny that. It performed its mission in Cuba and passed on, and the image of that flag is to-day worn in the heart of every grateful Cuban, its meaning is written in every line of their constitution, and that flag is over Cuba to-day, an inspiration and a protection. This same flag has a mission to perform in the Philippine Islands. It will perform that mission and may pass on, but it will never retreat.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill which gives these people a civil government. I am in favor of it because I am in favor of civil government always before a military government when the former is at all possible, and we are told by our fellow-countrymen, both in and out of the Army, that there is a necessity for this legislation. I believe that this is a long step in advance in the work we are doing for those people in that distant archipelago. We have taken a great many steps, and some of them have been slow, but none of them have been backward. The work has been in a new field, and we have had very little in our national life by the way of precedent to guide us. But those upon whom the responsibility is resting have brought forth splendid results, guided, as I believe they have been, by an approving conscience and sustained by purity of purpose and righteousness of intention. There have been stumbling-blocks, just as there are stumbling-blocks in the way of every great work; but I believe the foundation we are laying for the welfare of these people in their relation to themselves, as well as their relation to us, will, on account of these stumbling-blocks and hindrances, be all the firmer and the rewards in the way of orderly civil government will be all the richer.

This legislation bears one stamp that should commend it to all those people who are acquainted with our history during the last forty years, namely, the stamp of Democratic opposition. That is the most unmistakable brand of legislative virtue and wisdom that we find blown in the bottle of statutory enactment since the days of Abraham Lincoln. [Applause.] And if a stranger to our institutions desired to equip himself with a complete encyclopedia of beneficent national achievement during the last four decades of this Republic, he could do nothing better than catalogue carefully the various propositions condemned by the Democratic party in its various quadrennial national platforms.

Opposition! Opposition! Opposition! The Democratic party has for forty years been the adverse element in this nation. It has greased the rails, it has put sand in the boiler, it has piled ties on the track, it has jammed fence rails in the cattle guards, and attempted to throw the switch; but the train has moved on, and each time has reached its destination on schedule time. [Laughter and applause.]

And when this Congress adjourns, as adjourn it will in the next few days, and we who constitute the majority return to our homes, it will be with clean hands and with honest hearts; and when opportunity presents, as it will next November, the people will give us renewed assurances of their confidence and sympathy. [Applause.] And why should they not? The work in which we are engaged is the people's work. The problems which we are attempting to solve to-day are the problems brought about by reason of the people's action. The problems in this Philippine question are the problems to which the American people are absolutely committed.

We have been told it is "a burden." It may be a burden; but if it be a burden, it is a burden the people voluntarily assumed fifty months ago, when Pity opened its heart to Distress, when Strength extended its hand to Weakness, when American joy and gladness paused long enough to lift forever the black habiliments from three hundred years of Cuban woe. Gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber can not shift the responsibility.

I was very much interested in the address of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL] who opened the discussion to-day, and while he was speaking the history of this epoch, if epoch it be, went through my mind. A majority of the members now on the floor of this House were here when the initial step was taken; the gentleman from Texas was here, and he can not, neither can his colleagues, shift the responsibility for the problem we have before us to-day.

We all remember how in 1896 both parties had in their platforms planks pledging to the American people and the world the freedom and independence of Cuba. The situation over there had become intolerable, and we all made up our minds that the Spaniard must leave this Western Hemisphere. We all remember the stories of cruelty and inhumanity that came across the waters, exciting the sympathy and arousing the passions of our people during that remarkable campaign. And we all recall how, when this Congress was called in special session for the purpose of enacting legislation that would tend to relieve the domestic depression then existing, gentleman on the other side of this Chamber insisted that intervention in behalf of Cuba was paramount to the consideration of measures looking to the rehabilitation of our industries and the rescue of our own business.

In short, the Democratic leaders wanted war with Spain, and they wanted it right away. When we talked of revolutionizing schedules, our political opponents would reply with a resolution throwing down the gauntlet of war to the Spanish Government. We would insist on the speedy enactment of measures the direct effect of which would be the employment of armies of idle men here at home, and our opponents would reply by passing around this Chamber photographs of starving reconcentradoes, point us to the plank in our national platform pledging independence to Cuba, and charge us with deception, heartlessness, and cowardice.

Gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber neglected nothing in the way of taunt and ridicule and accusation to force this country into war. William McKinley was then President. He did not want war. And because William McKinley did not rush his country headlong into war, those opposed to him politically charged that he was slow. Then they asserted that he was a coward. Then they declared that he was in league with Wall street and that he had his suggestions from the ticker. Then they said he was corrupt. There was not an epithet that could be coined, suggestive of conspicuous littleness and incapacity, sordidness, and cowardice, that was not hurled at him. But he pursued his course patiently, attempting to solve the ugly problem along the lines of diplomacy.

The President was perfectly free in his expressions to those of us who went to the White House as to his reasons for not wanting war. He told us there were two reasons: First, that he had been through one war and knew its horrors. Said he, "War is always popular with the masses at the start, but there comes a time when it is not popular with them. I have been through it all, and I shrink from plunging my country into war, and shall not do it unless it is absolutely unavoidable."

He said that there was much of beauty, much of romance, much of chivalry, much of poetry in the marching away—the bugles sounding, the bands playing, the colors flying, with wife and sweetheart waving adieu; "But," said he, "there is a home coming that is different—black boxes from hospital and battlefield, met at the train by weeping women leading little children suddenly made fatherless; messages from comrades telling the story of 100 buried in a common trench, a message calculated to feed despair through all the years that come; sorrow, agony of body and mind on field, in hospital, and in home. I have been through it all, and I do not want to pass through it again."

"But there is a weightier reason," said the President. "If we get into war with Spain we will whip her in ninety days; we will wipe her fleets from the seas and capture her armies; but in the meantime what complications may arise no man can foretell. There will be questions that we do not now think of that will have to be answered; there will be problems not yet hinted at that will have to be solved. If we go into this war we inherit from it complications that may involve us in a great international war, certainly problems that will remain with our country for solution after you and I are in our graves."

To Senator BACON, of Georgia, just before he left the White House after a conference, the President said: "Remember, Senator, this war with Spain may mean a world war." All these warnings, these pleadings, were greeted with contempt and derision by the Democratic leaders of this House. They wanted war, and they would be satisfied with nothing else than war—and war came. Many of you will recall how the distinguished gentleman from Missouri charged up and down the aisle upon which his seat is so conveniently located, and, with a voice that penetrated almost to the caverns of the Ozark Mountains, declared that the Democrats had taken the Republicans by the scruff of the neck and dragged them into this war.

Mr. CLARK. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANDIS. For a question.

Mr. CLARK. Will the gentleman put into his speech the names of the 85 Republicans that constituted the "kickers' caucus" that waited on Mr. McKinley and told him that if he did not send the right kind of a message in here by a certain day, they would vote with us for a declaration recognizing the independence of the Cuban republic?

Mr. LANDIS. That is a fiction.

Mr. CLARK. It is not any such thing; it is the truth.

Mr. LANDIS. No 80 Republicans ever did anything of the kind.

Mr. CLARK. And Mr. A. J. HOPKINS, of Illinois, was chairman of that "kickers' caucus." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me? The applause had better be reserved. I was on that committee.

Mr. CLARK. The "kickers' caucus," were you?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I was on the committee which went to the White House. The chairman of the committee was Mr. A. J. HOPKINS. Not a word of the kind just indicated by the gentleman from Missouri was uttered at that White House by that committee or any member of it. We told the President that we would do as the Administration thought was best under the circumstances, and we always voted to support the Administration from beginning to end. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman from Wisconsin one question——

Mr. LANDIS. I decline to yield.

Mr. CLARK. What he went for——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor and he declines to yield.

Mr. CLARK. The gentleman gets up and makes a personal assault and then is too cowardly to get up and answer questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. LANDIS. The gentleman from Indiana would say to the gentleman from Missouri that he can secure time from his colleague and give attention to the statement that I made. I repeat it in the presence of this House that the gentleman from Missouri charged up and down that aisle and made his boast that they had taken the Republican party by the scruff of the neck and dragged it into that war.

Mr. CLARK. And that is precisely what we did.

Mr. LANDIS. Yes?

Mr. CLARK. We dragged you into that war.

Mr. LANDIS. And after you dragged us in, and these problems and these questions and these responsibilities came up, you turned your backs and ran away from every one of them. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CLARK. There is not a word of truth in that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please observe the rules of order.

Mr. CLARK. That is just exactly what I am doing. There is not a syllable of truth in that statement.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, that statement is not only true; they not only turned their backs and ran away when the first problem presented itself, but they are running yet. [Prolonged laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CLARK. That statement is not true.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield. The gentleman from Missouri is out of order.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States was right when he said that if we had a war with Spain it would be over in ninety days. It was over in ninety days, and in those ninety days were crowded more pride, more honor, more glory, more fame, and more achievement than has been packed in any ninety days in the history of civilization. Those countrymen of ours in that bay in that far-away eastern sea, 10,000 miles from home—do you remember the morning we heard of their victory? And then a little later, on the anniversary of our nation's birth, that other miracle at sea! Manila and Santiago Bay, companion pieces of victory!

And the martial instinct of our boys on land—how inspiring, how beautiful! They were baked by the tropical sun; they were soaked by the tropical rain; they were chilled by the deathly damp that steals out on its mission under the cloak of darkness, but they dragged their weary bodies on, sustained by the sacred fire of patriotism, and forced the capitulation of a securely entrenched superior force. And in the evening twilight they buried their fellow comrades and then they sat around camp fires and sang Dixie and the Star Spangled Banner. They knew both songs, for they were the sons of the men who had followed Grant and Sherman, Lee and Stonewall Jackson.

The procession of national glories in that brief campaign made every man in this Republic the brother of every other man, and opulence and adversity at home sat as companions under the same tent on the battlefield of Cuba. [Applause.] And we crowned it all with a magnanimity that took the breath of the world. Cervera and his generals were banqueted in American cities.

The entire Spanish army, captive in our hands, was fed and clothed, and then we loaded them on American ships, sailing under the American flag, transported them back home and placed them in the outstretched arms of their own people. There was enough national magnanimity and chivalric martial beauty in those brief days to stock the average nation with sacred historical memory for twenty centuries. [Applause.]

But gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber saw nothing in it that appealed to either their pride or patriotism. The only thing they extracted from those days and nights of glory was embalmed beef and typhoid fever.

Then came the Paris Commission. That Commission met and agreed upon a treaty; and I want to say that before that Commission met and before that treaty was agreed upon our friends on the other side of this House had a chance to declare their policy with reference to the Philippine Islands. It was the day after that battle in Manila Bay, when Dewey sent word to us that he had wiped out the Spanish fleet and that he could take the city at any time.

Said he, "I can take the city at any time, but I have not the troops to hold it. If you want me to take Manila and hold it, send me troops." And every man, woman, and child in this Republic—every Republican, Populist, Prohibitionist, and Democrat responded, "Send troops to Dewey in Manila." [Applause.] Troops were sent to Dewey in Manila, and Dewey and the American forces on land besieged Manila and captured it. It fell into our hands and became American territory by conquest.

The Paris Commission met. Four propositions were submitted relative to the disposition of the Philippine Islands. That was the first great problem that rolled out, the very problem that William McKinley had feared, the chief reason for his not wanting to go into that war.

Four propositions were made relative to the disposition of those islands. One was to give them back to Spain. Another was to sell them to some other nation. A third was to give them their independence, and the fourth was to take them and do the best we can with them. Give them back to Spain! There was not a man in this House who would have dared advocate it. Sell them to some other nation! The American conscience would not have tolerated it. Give them their independence!

I have heard Democrats on the floor of this House charge that not one Filipino in a thousand had the slightest notion of self-government. Of course the Filipinos thought they had. Some of them thought they could run their country. Why, there were a majority of people in this Republic who thought in 1892 that the Democrats could run this Government. [Prolonged laughter.] And how woefully they were mistaken, mistaken to such an extent that my distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] said on the floor of this House just a few weeks ago that Grover Cleveland was the greatest calamity that had been visited upon this country since the days of Adam. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman from Indiana would quote me correctly, because I do not want to be put in the attitude of saying something I did not say. What I did say was that the second election of Grover Cleveland was the greatest calamity that has happened to the human race since the fall of Adam. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANDIS. That only emphasizes my statement. But I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he did not vote for him?

Mr. CLARK. That is one of the things that I expect to pray Almighty God to give me absolution for in the day of judgment. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Missouri not only voted for him in 1892, but he went to the Chicago convention with his delegation from Missouri. I saw him there. I saw him at the head of it, marching up and down the halls of the Grand Pacific Hotel, notwithstanding the New York delegation was a unit against Mr. Cleveland's nomination, and I heard him singing—

Grover, Grover,
Four years more of Grover;
Then we'll be in clover.

[Laughter.]

And I want to make this prediction, Mr. Chairman. The Democratic party is in rather a distressed condition just now. It is hunting for a Moses. The "peerless leader" is living in a $5,000 barn preparatory to moving into a $25,000 house under this Republican gold-standard Administration. [Laughter.] And he is going to retire from politics, and they need some one to lead them out of the wilderness. It looks very much to me as though Grover Cleveland were that man; and I want to venture this prophecy, that if he should be nominated by the next Democratic national convention there will not be anybody in this Republic who will sing louder and with more unction than the gentleman from Missouri that old refrain:

Grover, Grover,
Four years more of Grover,
Then we'll be in clover.

[Laughter.]

The other proposition relative to the disposition of the Philippine Islands was to take them and do the best we could with them, and that the Commission decided to do; but before it decided to do that the President of the United States, always anxious to consult the people and get the sentiment of the masses, had gone throughout the country and spent something like two weeks among the people. The people spoke to him through their public assemblies, and they said to him from Maine to California, "We want to retain the Philippine Islands."

That is what they said to him. The treaty was signed accordingly, and came here to the United States, to the Senate; and at that time it did not have any more legal, binding force than the snap of my finger. Before it could be given the binding force and effect of law it had to be ratified by two-thirds of the Senate. As I remember, the Republicans were 16 votes short. It looked as though the treaty was doomed.

If it had been doomed to defeat, we would not be here to-day legislating for a civil government for the Philippine Islands. Just at that time a gentleman showed up whose face was familiar to the people of this capital. He came here from Florida, where his regiment was encamped. He was a gory, gaudy, gilt-edged hero, fresh from the fields of carnage. [Laughter.] His name was William Jennings Bryan, and he put his shoulder to the wheel in favor of the treaty. He dragged this Democrat to its support, and that Democrat to its support, until he brought to its support enough Democrats—just enough—to ratify the treaty.

To use the language of my distinguished friend from Missouri, "William Jennings Bryan took those Democrats by the scruff of the neck and dragged them to the support of the treaty." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] I think 16 Democrats voted for it. That, gentlemen, was an exhibition, a practical illustration of 16 to 1. [Renewed laughter.] The treaty was ratified, and the very minute it was ratified it became the law of the land, and the Constitution makes it imperative on the President of the United States to enforce the law, and if he does not do it he is liable to impeachment.

The President of the United States knew that there was a rebellion going on in the Philippine Islands, and he sent the Army and the Navy there to suppress it. The Army and the Navy have suppressed it. The Army and the Navy will suppress it again, if necessary. Our Army and our Navy, our country, will do their duty in the Philippine Islands; will stay there with the heavy hand of Federal authority until the last man in rebellion has laid down his bolo and until the last one of these 1,700 islands has written its name on the scroll of civilization. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Our Democratic friends then could have kept us out of the Philippine Islands had they arisen in their might and opposed sending troops to Manila. Our Democratic friends could have kept us out of the Philippine Islands had they refused to give aid and comfort in the ratification of the treaty.

But they say that if we had given those people over there assurance that they could rule themselves, that they could have their own government, we would never have had any war.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, that is not what brought on war in the Philippine Islands. It was not that expectation and our failure to give them this assurance that brought on the war. It was the announcement that came from the Democrats in this country that we did not seek the the well-being of that people, but that we proposed to keep them in bondage and slavery that brought on this war. Here is the message President McKinley sent those people when the Taft Commission went there:

It will be the duty of the commander of the forces of occupation to announce and proclaim in the most public manner that we come not as invaders or conquerors, but as friends, to protect the natives in their homes, in their employments, and in their personal and religious rights.

That was the message of William McKinley to the people of the Philippine Islands, and along with that message from the President of the United States went the speeches of the Democratic leaders on the floor of this House. In substance these speeches said: "That is a lie; our nation intends to enslave you and to place the yoke of bondage upon you." And as a result the fight commenced, and fighting has been going on ever since. Their leaders when taken from the mountains and brought back say that it was because of that understanding and this assurance received from Democrats that they prolonged this war.

Lawton said just before he died that if he fell the force behind the bullet would be the encouragement those in rebellion had received from his own countrymen. A soldier whom I saw about a year ago told me that after capturing one of the towns in Luzon he saw pasted upon the walls of a public building this announcement:

An election is soon to be held in the United States. William J. Bryan, the Democratic candidate, is going to be elected. If he is elected, the Filipinos will have their independence. Fight on, Filipinos, fight on!

And they fought on, as the result of this encouragement and these assurances, and graves have been multiplied in the swamps and among the mountains. But it is at an end, practically, Mr. Chairman. In the course of a few weeks there will be but 18,000 soldiers in the Philippine Islands. Peace will have come to that people; law and order will be theirs, and a great white mark will be placed to the credit of the American people for facing that great problem and solving it as good conscience and good judgment and loyalty to national honor dictated it should be solved. [Applause.]

Our friends on the other side have criticised and have been particularly severe on the American soldier. They say they have not had anything against the American soldier, but they are against the policy adopted by this Administration in the Philippine Islands. The soldiers, however, represent their sons, and their neighbors' sons, people from their own States, people from the districts which many of them represent, and it would seem that common sympathy would dictate that they give some sort of kindly consideration to them.

They have nothing against the soldiers, they say, and yet, when there was brought into this House the other day a bill providing an appropriation of $500,000 for the proper shelter of the officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States, lawfully on duty in the Philippine Islands, to be expended at the discretion of the President, every Democrat except 7 voted against it, and every Republican on the floor of this House voted in favor of it. "Not another soldier nor another dollar for this unholy war."

That is the same cry we heard in this Republic one-third of a century ago when the life of the nation was at stake. They said it to Abraham Lincoln when he was struggling in anguish and in prayer to preserve the life of the nation. "Not another dollar nor another soldier for this unholy war," and they said the war was a failure. But the soldiers marched on, and the Republic was saved, and the flag floats over all the States just as it did in 1860. [Applause.]

This slander and this abuse of the Army is having its effect. It caused the death the other day of one of the brave fellows who survived the massacre of Balangiga. He was killed, or fatally wounded, in the State of Tennessee. Some one in his presence charged that "two-thirds of the American soldiers who went to the Philippines were hoodlums and the other third were cowards and bullies," and, brave man that he was, he resented it. He survived Balangiga to be killed in Tennessee while defending the honor of his comrades. Who sowed that seed in Tennessee?

Read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and you will get an answer to that question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state who in the State of Tennessee made any such statement——

Mr. LANDIS. Oh, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee did not sow it; he did not sow the seed, because he would be too late to sow it. I have on my desk a bill that the gentleman introduced repealing the war taxes six months after that tax had been repealed. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is just six months earlier than I ever thought the Republican party would ever try to relieve the American people.

Mr. LANDIS. No one would ever accuse the gentleman from Tennessee of sowing that seed. The seed would have been sown, the ground would have been harrowed, the furrows would have been plowed, and the harvest would have taken place before the gentleman from Tennessee discovered that anything had been expected in the way of a crop. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] We know who sowed this seed. It was not sown by the Republicans. You can read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and ascertain who sowed it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

Mr. LANDIS. Does the gentleman want to ask a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like the gentleman to name the man from Tennessee who used the language that he refers to.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, it is not in order for a member of the House to refer to a member of the Senate, is it?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I thought the gentleman said some member of this House.

Mr. LANDIS. I think not; the gentleman will realize and appreciate and understand what I said about six months from now. [Laughter.] While the Democratic opponents of this bill have gone after the Army in general, they seem to have a particular spite against Fred Funston. He seems to be the target for most of them in both branches of Congress and throughout the country.

And I want to say something about Fred Funston. I speak of him as Fred Funston, because to those who knew him before the eyes of the world were upon him, he will always be Fred Funston—brave, chivalric Fred Funston. We have heard him called a "Jayhawker brigadier" and "that river-swimming brigadier." I want to say that the deeds of that little Kansan will be heroic inspiration for the youth of this Republic centuries hence, when dog fennel will be growing on the graves of those who speak his name with a contemptuous curl of the lip. [Applause.]

Let us see what Fred Funston has done to make himself the target for the sneers and slurs of certain gentlemen. When a mere boy he volunteered to get certain information for the Government relative to certain territory in Alaska, where the foot of the white man had never trod. He got it, even though he did have to climb precipitous mountains covered with eternal snow and plunge into the Yukon River running with ice. He spent a winter in that solitude. During that winter he learned that starvation threatened a crew of ice-bound whalers, and on a sled pulled by Eskimo's dogs he hurried to them 600 miles in the snow-bound and ice-locked interior, with no guide but the stars and no companion to consult but his compass.

I will venture to say that the most radical anti-imperialist could not convince one of those famishing unfortunates to whom he carried succor in the midst of that arctic darkness that Fred Funston was not at least worthy of respectful treatment. Later he heard the cry of Cuba, and that wail of distress, freighted with the hopes of three centuries, penetrated deeper than his ear. It touched his heart, it awakened his sympathy, it congealed in him a sincere, strong, sacred, heroic resolve.

That wail to him was something else than an invitation to turn a political trick. He called on the Cuban junta and offered his services. They were inclined to laugh at him, for he weighed less than 100 pounds, scarcely arose to the dignity of a stripling. He learned, however, that they had scarcely anyone to handle their artillery. He told them he would be ready for artillery service in a month, although he knew no more about that or any other branch of the service than an infant. He bought books, he entered a school where artillery practice was taught, and a few months later, on the battlefield where brave Osgood, of Pennsylvania, fell a sacrifice to liberty, Fred Funston stepped across his lifeless body to command [applause], and he, too, fell, shot through and through.

He was carried to the mountains, and the nobility of Cuban womanhood nursed him. I saw him when he came home to enter a hospital, and I saw two commissions he brought with him, neither one of which would he to-day exchange for a sneerer's seat in the Senate or House of Representatives. Those commissions were written on plain paper. There was no gold seal attached to either of them, neither was there any red ribbon hanging about them. They were written on the battlefield, in the ink of sacrifice, with the pen of admiration. One of these bore the signature of Maximo Gomez, while the other was in the handwriting of Calixto Garcia. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in the most beautiful and conspicuous park of this capital city there have been placed two monuments representative of patriots who spoke other than the American tongue, but who offered their swords, their strong right arms, their quick intelligence, and their large hearts to Washington in that struggle for American independence a century and a quarter ago. And I will say that the visitors who come hither from the various States and Territories of this Union, as well as from foreign lands, can but look with emotion upon the counterfeit presentment of the figures of Marquis de Lafayette and Count de Rochambeau. What these two immortals were to Washington, Fred Funston was to Gomez and Garcia, and I expect to live to see the day when the statue of the brave little Kansan, who offered his life for Cuban liberty, will be unveiled in the most beautiful park in the capital city of the Cuban Republic. [Applause.]

When Funston came back from Cuba suffering from wounds that were all but mortal, he told me one day that it was the ambition of his life to lead a regiment of American soldiers against an army of Spain. And when he said that I thought of another man who, forty years ago, with equal modesty said it was the ambition of his life to command a regiment. And this other man did command a regiment, and later he commanded an army, and later he commanded armies. And, Mr. Chairman, he lived to be called a beast, a brute, a monster, a butcher, and a murderer. But he survived it all and became one of the most conspicuous guests that is entertained in the white temple of immortality. [Applause.]

The greatest disappointment of Fred Funston's life was when, at the head of the Twentieth Kansas, he was sent to the Philippine Islands rather than to Cuba. He obeyed like a soldier, and in a few months the deeds and achievements of that regiment thrilled with loyal ecstasy everybody in this Republic. By his bravery and military skill he won the affection and admiration of Otis, of Lawton, of Wheaton, of MacArthur, of Chaffee, of every officer and every private, and even of Aguinaldo himself.

And when that regiment came home after the war was supposed to be over and was mustered out a Democratic governor presented its colonel with a sword, just as they are going to present Waller with a sword in a few days down in the State of Virginia; just as we will present Bell with a sword when he comes home, and just as we will place balm upon the wounded heart of that aged mother in Ohio by giving a sword to her son, Gen. Jacob H. Smith, when he comes home. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Just at this time, Mr. Chairman, came the supreme test of Fred Funston's life, just as there comes a supreme test in the life of every man. The mail brought him an offer from a leading lecture bureau of $50,000 for 50 lectures. A little later a proposition was made him by a leading journal offering him $10,000 and expenses a year as its representative in the South African war.

Fred. Funston had been a poor boy. He was a poor man. He had recently married. Here was opulence. He had about arranged to accept the lecture offer, with the understanding that after it was completed he could go to South Africa, when there was placed in his hands a telegram from the President of the United States asking him if he would return to the Philippine Islands, and telling him that he could render his country service there. His wife was sitting with him. He read the telegram and handed it over to her and said, "This settles it all; I shall return to the Philippine Islands." [Applause.] He returned to the Philippine Islands.

I recall that the old reader we used in the public schools taught us that there was always a reward for the man who does his duty. My observation has been that there is truth and virtue in that saying. The reward may come late, and it may come through an unexpected channel, but it is sure to come. It came to Fred. Funston, for Aguinaldo was captured, and he was made a brigadier-general in the Regular Army. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have dwelt at some length on the achievements of this young officer, because for some inexplicable reason he seems to have been made the target not only for the contempt and ridicule of those who are opposing our policy in the Philippines, but for their venom, their hatred, and their malignancy as well. I confess that I can not understand those promptings in the human breast that lead men to pursue a fellow-countryman as certain gentlemen, citizens of a common republic, have pursued this soldier. I believe that a century hence historians will say that for courage, tact, and skill the capture of Aguinaldo stands without rival. [Applause.] It represents the very refinement of courage. Military men say the chances of failure were ninety-nine out of one hundred.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman such time as is necessary to conclude his remarks. [Applause.]

Mr. LANDIS. His plans made, Funston bade his wife goodbye, and as he held her in his arms, both realizing how desperate was the mission, both thought of their unborn babe. The territory to be traversed was made up of mountain ranges, gashed with gorges and made terrible with precipices, never before crossed save by a Jesuit priest a quarter of a century previous. The rations of that little band was made up of parched corn. That soon gave out and they caught snails and ate them. They devoured limpets scraped from the rocks. They crawled for miles on their hands and knees, and all testify that had the distance been 20 miles greater none of them could have survived.

Mr. Chairman, in his brief career Mr. Funston has made his country his debtor. He was always brave—he was always a gallant foe. He pacified his province in the Philippines, and the universal testimony is that his rule was kindly and humane. He deserves better recognition from his country than the sneers of public men honored with conspicuous places in public life. When I consider the story of his life I feel that in him has been given to us to see and know the qualities which were worshiped and which won in the days of chivalry, when knighthood was in flower. And henceforth, however partisan this debate may become and however bitter the policy of this Administration may be attacked, I trust that on this floor we will never again see anyone affect ridicule and contempt for one who a score of times risked his life in the service of his country, and who in the swamps of the Tropics, as well as among the icebergs of the Arctic Circle, demonstrated that he is made of that peculiar clay of which fame fashions heroes. [Applause.]

As I said once before on this floor, I am no lawyer. Want and necessity rescued me from such a course at an early stage of my career. But there is an accepted legal proposition, as old as the common law, to the effect that a man accused of crime is entitled to a trial in the vicinage in which the crime is alleged to have been committed. In the first place, the accused is entitled to be present. The time, the place, the circumstances, the entire environment, are a part of the affair to be adjudicated.

I deny your right to try to convict and sentence the American soldier here in this Chamber, and yet that is exactly what you insist upon doing, and you insist upon doing it in his absence. An inspiring spectacle indeed—gentlemen on salaries of $5,000 a year, with private secretaries, at the seat of government, surrounded by every safeguard and luxury, cooled by electric fans six days in the week and by the breeze of the ocean the seventh, trying, convicting, and sentencing the American soldiers absent 10,000 miles, carrying the flag through the miasma and death of the tropical swamps, battling a foe that masks the heart of the assassin behind the smile of friendship!

I want to submit this question: Suppose you were in those faraway islands, a member of an American regiment; you became attached to your comrades by those ties cemented by the march, the camp, the drill, the battle, the hospital, the grave. On the march, scouts from your company having been sent out, you come upon the lifeless bodies of your comrades, the evidences unmistakable that some of them have been buried alive up to their necks.

You see them the victims of starvation, with food just beyond their reach. The heads of others of them have been cut off and placed on poles along the path or highway. Others have been chained to ant-hills to be eaten alive. Others, possibly friendly natives, have had their abdomens cut open, their entrails nailed to trees, and then tortured to compel them to circle the trees and disembowel themselves. If, after all this, you should capture a man who, you felt, knew all about these atrocities and could give the names of the guilty, do you think you would consider the water cure too inhuman to resort to? I think not.

In judging the soldiers in the Philippine Islands put yourselves in their places, make allowance for human passion and the instinct of revenge as well as self-preservation; bear in mind that war is not a Sabbath-school picnic; it is not a dinner in New York with champagne and Carl Schurz. It is sacrifice and wounds and disease and death, and you can not rob it of sporadic instances of cruelty and oppression, inhumanity and revenge, any more than you can take away the heat from the breath of the conflagration, or wreck and ruin and devastation from the path of the flood.

Making allowance for all the wrath and passion that go with war, our own people in the Philippines and the people of other nations state that in the entire story of arms and achievements from the beginning of recorded times there has not been a series of campaigns conducted that for wisdom, justice, humanity, morals, glory, and civilization will stand in the same category with the campaigns of our armies in Luzon and the other islands that make up that archipelago. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I know that this debate is now drawing to a close by mutual agreement on both sides of this House. I know the list is filled with gentlemen who desire to speak this afternoon. I can not transgress much further upon the time allotted. I simply want to say that there is one proposition in this bill as presented to the House, with all due respect to my friend the chairman [Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin], of which I doubt the advisability at this time. It is that provision giving the Filipinos a legislative branch of government to be constituted of natives.

I question if they are ready for it. We have had an experience in this country along this same line. We were too free with the right of suffrage. Withhold it in the Philippines until the census is taken. Withhold it until we know more about the capacity and capability of those people for self-government. Reserve it as a reward for thrift, industry, and intelligence. Do not give it away as a trinket that is not valued or to be valued, and I believe that we will reserve a right that will redound to the welfare of those people as well as to the welfare of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LANDIS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is the gentleman aware that the original suggestion for a lower house, to be chosen by a limited electorate of the people of the Philippine Islands, was made by William McKinley in a dispatch which he sent to the Schurman Commission? Is he aware that the Schurman Commission, after protracted investigation, unanimously reported in favor of the election by the people of the Philippine Islands of a lower branch of the legislature, saying that it was of the utmost importance in their opinion that that should be allowed them?

Is the gentleman aware that the Taft Commission, after the most protracted investigation, makes the same report? And not only do they request it, but they urge it; and that Governor Taft, eminent as a judge, eminent as a lawyer, has by letter and by personal solicitation requested that he be not sent back without an enactment of that kind at this session of Congress, saying it would be a calamity not to enact it?

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I knew in substance all this, but I have felt that we have had such a lesson in our own country that it certainly would not do any harm if we reserved this right a few months. We can give it to them during any session of Congress. We will sacrifice nothing at all if we reserve it now. We may sacrifice a great deal if we bestow it now. I know Governor Taft very well. I know his large heart. I know that he feels as though this will interest the people of that country, and, as it has been expressed, will give the Filipino orators and those ambitious for public life an opportunity to let off steam. But it strikes me as though it were a great deal like giving a little boy a box of matches to go to the barn and play in order that he may not annoy his mother.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is the gentleman aware that the same objection which he now urges to the granting of the lower branch of the legislature in the Philippines was urged in almost his identical language against the granting of a lower branch of the legislature for Porto Rico, and that all of the prophecies concerning it being analogous to the giving of matches to a child have proven to be fallacious, and that nothing of the kind has happened in Porto Rico?

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I admit that the gentleman who is chairman of this great committee has had opportunities to investigate and advantages of information that I have not possessed. I desired, however, to make that expression before concluding my speech, of course waiving any suggestion that I am as well fitted to speak relative to that matter as is the distinguished gentleman who has given the subject so much thought and who a few days ago gave this House such a splendid presentation of all the questions entering into the future welfare of this new territorial acquisition.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I will say that there is just enough of the old-fashioned doctrine of predestination in me to lead me to have faith in the ultimate glorious destiny of this Republic and the final world-wide triumph and domination of the Anglo-Saxon race. As has been said by a gifted writer, this Anglo-Saxon civilization has been on the march for nearly two thousand years. At times that march has been slow and sometimes it has seemed as though the last camp had been reached. The fires of the bivouac once or twice went out, apparently never again to be lighted, but suddenly the flame again flashed forth and the march went on.

No territory pressed by this Anglo-Saxon tread has ever been lost to enlightenment, to liberty, and to law. Britain recognized the banner, and twelve centuries later the Anglo-Saxon colors went up at Jamestown. It required a century and a quarter for them to cross to the valley beyond these mountains. About that time the older branch of this race planted the flag in Canada and in India, while the younger branch went to the Mississippi.

The Spaniard threw the great Louisiana territory into the lap of France as a bulwark against the advance, but the clear vision of Napoleon Bonaparte saw a destined republic, extending from ocean to ocean, and with the single stroke of a pen he annulled the alliance which the heirs of Isabella had attempted to make against fate. Three generations after the ink dried on that parchment happy children were playing in American homes along the Platte, the Columbia, and the Sacramento.

It was not Thomas Jefferson that gained the territory west of the Mississippi for this Republic; neither was it due to the political complications among European nations. This determined the time and offered the opportunity for the acquisition. It was the sublime might and destiny of the American people, the heirs of the traditions and fortunes of a world-mastering race, which won Louisiana for the United States; and it is this same spirit of liberty and this same passion for law, still springing from the breasts of heroes, that will nourish the libraries planted at Manila and make effective the mission upon which we start the law for civil government which we are now framing, and upon it all we can, without Pharisaical pretense or hypocrisy, ask the favor and blessing of Almighty God.

I believe this Republic has a mission both at home and abroad; its mission at home, the happiness and prosperity of its own people—its mission abroad, the bestowal of the blessings of law and order and civilization upon other people, even upon those who live in the uttermost parts of the earth.

I believe this is God's favorite nation and that he has directed it ever since Lexington and Concord, and to-day I believe—

Our destiny He holds
As in the hollow of His hand,
And all the armies, all the Fleets of earth
Can nothing do to check our Forward course 'till He attains
His end.
On stern New England's coast
He sowed the seed three hundred years ago.
He warmed it with His breath,
With human tears he watered it,
And from that soil brought forth a tree,
Whose fruit, when ripe, shall be
For all the children of this mundane sphere.
Yes, God still leads us on—
From Plymouth Rock to the Philippines
The grand, triumphal march of Human liberty has never paused;
And through the mists of coming years
I see the emancipated hosts
Press on, and up, to those broad
Heights where all mankind shall stand
Before their Maker free,
And in the shadow of the Stars and Stripes find peace and happiness
Forevermore!

[Loud, long, and continuous applause.]

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, before yielding to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] I desire to read one or two things bearing upon the subject under debate which I think will prove of interest to the members of this House. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs in opening the debate quoted extensively from the testimony of one Felipe Buencamino in order to establish the charge that the Philippine government had planned, prior to the 4th day of February, 1899, a wholesale massacre of the Americans then located at Manila. The only testimony which has ever been adduced, the only scintilla of evidence that has ever been produced by anybody, to sustain this odious charge against the Filipinos is that of this swift witness Buencamino, quoted, as I have said, by the distinguished chairman of this committee.

I hold in my hand a document which contains a letter dated Manila, January 1, 1900, and written by Theodore W. Noyes, editor of the Washington Star, then in the city of Manila. Mr. Noyes says——

Mr. COCHRAN. Is not Mr. Noyes the staunch supporter of the Administration's Philippine policy?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Noyes is the staunch supporter, yes; the thick and thin supporter of the Administration's policy in the Philippine Islands. This is what Mr. Noyes says:

In response to a question concerning Aguinaldo's character and influence, and the importance of his associates, General Otis said:

"Buencamino is a professional turncoat, everything in turn and nothing long. He has been an officer in the Spanish army, and was secretary of state in Aguinaldo's cabinet when he was captured."

This is the testimony of General Otis, the commander in chief of the American forces in the Philippine Islands at that time, vouched for by Theodore W. Noyes, editor of the Washington Star, whose Republicanism and imperialistic tendencies I think no Republican upon this floor will question, as to the character of Felipe Buencamino. To further show that the testimony of this Filipino traitor, Buencamino, is utterly worthless and that he is in no sense a fair representative of the Philippine people, I desire now to read a letter just received from a distinguished Filipino, a man of ability, of unquestioned patriotism, of the highest character, and one who possesses in the largest degree the confidence of his countrymen:

BOSTON, MASS., June 21, 1902.

The Hon. WILLIAM A. JONES,
House of Representatives, United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: After reading a full report of Señor Buencamino's evidence before the House committee I feel genuinely sorry for the man, and were it not that I regard it as a duty to expose his misstatements I should much prefer to leave him to his own peculiar and futile devices. If the American people would only read his evidence in full, and not the edited reports of it which appear in the press, I should be quite satisfied. It contains its own refutation in its glaring contradictions, its dexterous evasions, its extraordinary admissions, and its servile, fawning flatteries and self-deprecations. Indeed, were it not for the fact that Señor Buencamino knows that this influence, under Filipino rule, would be less than the shadow of the lost soul of an invisible decimal, I should be inclined to believe that he is really an enemy of the Administration in disguise, seeking to place it in an untenable position in regard to statehood and American citizenship for the Filipinos. I intend to have his evidence translated and published in the Philippines, without note or comment. You can have no idea of the effect it will produce among his fellow-countrymen. I am sure if he had known of the cross-examination to which he was to be subjected by you and others, he would never have come to this country.

But the point to which I desire to draw special attention is this: How is it that not one of the thousands of able Filipinos—men of irreproachable public and private reputation, who President Schurman says are the equals of those in similar vocations in Europe and America—how is it that not one of these men can be induced to publicly testify, either here or in the Philippines, in favor of the present policy of the Administration? And why is it that Señor Buencamino, the sorriest specimen of political and religious inconsistency, has been furnished with leave of absence and free passage to America in order to testify against the ability of his own countrymen for self-government? It is as certain as the rising of the sun that if any of the above referred to Filipinos had been willing to testify in favor of the present policy they would have been brought to this country.

The conclusion, therefore, is irresistible that none of these men will testify and that those whose private interests make them in some measure favorable to American rule are unwilling to face the public odium to their fellow-countrymen by giving even a temporary support to the present policy. Even Chief Justice Arellano will not publicly commit himself. I have, indeed, heard on good authority that he is opposed to the permanent occupation of the islands by America, and that his great fear is lest America should get too strong a hold upon the Philippines. Under all these circumstances I regard the advent of Señor Buencamino as of value to the cause of Philippine independence, for if he, with his political reputation, is the only Filipino who can be found to publicly espouse the opposite policy, then how feeble must the support of that policy be.

It is usual and apparently regarded as being politic at the present time to declare that the Filipinos are "children," and that they do not know this, that, and the other. There never was a greater mistake. The Filipino mind has not, apparently, been fathomed by those who alternately proclaim its simplicity and its "Asiatic" astuteness. The Filipinos know that the Philippine issue is not permanently settled. They are being continually assured that "America has come to stay," but they know too much of the political system in this country to place reliance in any such assurance. There is still the future with all its possibilities; there is still the moral question to be settled, and moral issues have a peculiar habit of winning in the end. No Filipino with a reputation to lose, whatever his present personal interests may be, is willing to take up a position which will place him ultimately in the wrong and in opposition to the present sentiments of his fellow-countrymen. Governor Taft may endeavor to persuade himself and others of "the promising outlook" and of "their willingness to accept American sovereignty;" and Señor Buencamino may proclaim with tearful unction that "Governor Taft is the idol of the Philippine people." Let no one be deceived by this optimism or this flattery. The man to become the idol of the Filipinos is he who will authoritatively proclaim the independence of the Philippines.

But to return to Señor Felipe Buencamino. Elsewhere I have shown that he once denounced the sovereignty which he now professes to "love;" that he made a serious charge against the late President McKinley; that he supported Spain against his own countrymen and sought to induce Aguinaldo to fight against America; that he was the bitterest opponent of the martyred Rizal, whom he now professes to love and praise; that he had been subject to three temporal and two spiritual powers within three years, all at the call of "overmastering political reasons," and that he has now come to appeal for statehood and American citizenship! Perhaps his most objectionable characteristics are his fawning flattery and his abject self-depreciation. Listen to this: "Permit me," he says to the committee, "to express the happy emotion that I feel at this moment, an emotion which comes from my heart, an emotion coming from the soul of my country (!), because, after a voyage of forty-seven days, I have the honor and pleasure (!!) of appearing before the sovereign of my country."(!!!)

Could anything be more nauseating? Yes; here it is: "If we," he says again to the committee, "understand by 'education' culture, then we are entirely uncultured, beginning with myself, and I request this committee to pardon all my lack of culture which may have been shown, because it is not our fault; the Spaniards have not educated us for this." Could anything be more abject? There is a point where self-depreciation becomes meanness. In all this he is an unworthy representative of that dignity and self-respect which even the humblest Filipino possesses. Fancy such a man being on the civil service commission of the Philippine government!

Señor Buencamino's meanness of spirit is equaled only by his inconsistency. When he makes two statements that are diametrically opposed, the question arises, Which of them is true?

Thus, on pages 5-6 of his evidence before the committee, he says that the present conditions, as compared with those under Spanish rule, are like "the difference between happiness and misery." He fails to show wherein the present happiness consists, but he certainly demonstrates by an array of facts that misery was indeed universal under Spanish rule. At the very time, however, when Spain was inflicting all this "misery," and when Rizal and his compatriots were urging reform, Señor Don Felipe published a proclamation with the title "To our dear mother country, Spain," in which he says: "What more could we ask or desire in a lawful life than that which we enjoy under the shadow of Spain? We prefer * * * the paternal Government of Spain, * * * which represents in the past such great sacrifices and in the present such great watchfulness over our welfare and happiness as calls for our deepest veneration. * * * What more, then, can we ask or desire? We must be blind or insane not to be aware of the well-being which we enjoy in the beneficent shadow of the Spanish standard. Death to the traitors who disturb our peace and public tranquillity! * * * Long live Spain and her paternal government in these islands! * * * And long live the Philippines, by Spain and for Spain, our beloved mother country!"

Where, then, was the "misery?" Since he lavished this extravagant praise on conditions which he now declares were "misery," what is the value of his testimony as to present "happiness?" Which is the truth?

Again, Don Felipe is an unrelenting opponent of the friars. Quite right. He has even forsaken what he once declared to be "an enlightened religion, the Roman Catholic faith," because of them. In his own words, he has abandoned "the friars and passed over to the Protestants," to Presbyterianism, which may be said to be the antithesis of Roman Catholicism.

Well, who would have believed it? In the above-mentioned proclamation he says: "The friars and all the Spanish constitute for us the basis of our civilized life. With them we have peace and order; they leave behind them education and industry, the springs of all our public felicity, and without them would come irresistibly disorder and chaos. * * * Affection, adhesion, respect, and submission to all that is Spanish, be it of the friars or not; this is what the country incarnates in her pure and virgin soul." Pure and virgin soul! What balderdash. But at that time Señor Buencamino was said to have been in the employ of the friars; he is now in the employ of the Civil Commission, hence his change of opinion, hence the former praise and the present blame. Again, which is the truth?

Señor Buencamino can not now find words to express his high appreciation of Dr. Rizal; he declares him to be the idol of the people. One of his present objects in America is "to collect data to hold an exposition in Manila in honor of the Philippine hero, Dr. Rizal." How incensed will the Filipinos be when they hear that the one whose memory is loved and revered is thus to be desecrated by this histrionic sham. When Rizal was in Europe, poor and penniless, working with other Filipino patriots in order to free their country from Spanish "misery," this is what Señor Don Felipe Buencamino wrote concerning them: "Our love for Spain and her present government in this country burns with such a flame that we should like to hold the cowardly authors of these libels in our hands so that the heat of it might burn them, and we might then cast to the winds their unclean ashes, so that, if possible, they might be utterly lost and reduced to nothingness. And we shall not rest until we discover and tear from them their masks, so that every noble and worthy Filipino may strike at their ignoble faces a blow of scorn whose clear and sonorous echo shall be the genuine sign and evidence of this sincere and solemn protest." And the man who wrote this would now desecrate the memory of Rizal with his unhallowed influence. Does Governor Taft, do the members of the Civil Commission, know that these are the words of a prominent employee, spoken of one to whose memorial statue they have subscribed?

It is fair to assume that General Weyler is under the ban and execration of every decent man and of the whole civilized world. "Butcher Weyler," "the methods of Weyler," "Weylerism," these are synonyms for all that is cruel and inhuman. Señor Buencamino, had he been questioned by the committee, would doubtless have joined in the general execration, and would have drawn flattering comparisons between the methods of Weyler and the methods of Waller. Yet when General Weyler was governor-general of the Philippines this is what Don Felipe said of his patron in the same proclamation in which he denounced Rizal and his compatriots:

"It is true that we who are innocent can live tranquilly, protected by the civic prudence and valor of the governor and captain-general, his excellency Señor Don Valeriano Weyler. This illustrious soldier, this zealous and highly intelligent governor, after almost a year of voyages by sea and land, has just finished an inspection of almost all the provinces of the archipelago (this reminds one of similar inspections by Governor Taft), learning and testing the truth of what we say—that is, that we, the mass of the Filipinos, neither feel nor profess the ideas and thoughts which are contained in these offensive writings and incendiary documents. * * * On the contrary, General Weyler will have seen predominating in us religious sentiments as well as those which we so greatly owe to the mother country. * * * And it is plain that, estimating at his true value the most worthy Marquis of Teneriffe (General Weyler), whose virtues are as well known as they are evident, it is plain that he cares for us and loves us. * * * Long live General Weyler and all our constituted authorities." And he concluded this encomium on Spain, the friars, and "Butcher" Weyler with these patriotic words: "Here, then, is the theme for which we are all ready to shed the last drop of the blood which flows in our veins."

This is the man who is a member of the civil-service commission, who has been given a free passage to America, and who says that Governor Taft is the "idol of the Filipinos." Of what value is his praise? After his nauseating flattery of Weyler I am delighted to find that he does not praise me. If he said that I was the idol of the people, that to me would be proof positive that I was not. He says that I "accused Agoncillo of being a traitor," and that I am an "irreconcilable insurgent." Both of these statements happen to be untrue; but, then, no one would ever dream of going to Don Felipe for crystalline veracity. As a matter of fact, when I was writing to the Philippine government urging it to cease hostilities Don Felipe was declaring that his "attitude was firm," and that he was "ready to sacrifice his life" for Philippine independence.

Señor Buencamino must have seen all my dispatches urging a cessation of hostilities, for he was a member of the government when these dispatches were opened and read, yet he now says I am an "irreconcilable insurgent." But there is one charge which he does not and can not bring against me, namely, that of forsaking a cause once espoused. I have stood by the cause of my country through good and evil report. My pocket has never affected my patriotism. I have never supported Spain; I have never denounced Rizal; I have never praised the friars; I have never flattered Weyler; I have never said that Governor Taft was the idol of the Filipinos; I have never made unwarrantable charges against American statesmen; I have never praised American or any other foreign sovereignty. On the contrary, I have worked persistently for the independence of my country ever since I was a boy, and, come good or ill, I shall work for it until it is achieved or as long as life remains.

But I have not yet done with Señor Buencamino's inconsistencies. In his evidence before the committee he emphasizes the necessity of American control in the Philippines. "I wish to let it be known," he says, "that our desires are to obtain a just and liberal government and to become Americans." The Filipinos "need a lot of education, much instruction, and a firm and strong government, supported by the constitutional and executive powers of America." But as late as February, 1900, in answer to the question put by General Wheeler, "Would the Filipinos accept an honest American government, which would guarantee their personal liberty and property?" Don Felipe replied: "We answer no. First, because a foreign government seems to the Filipinos the same as the Spanish Government. Secondly, the American Government shows its title as a buyer, and as such is hated by the people, because their dignity is humiliated. In the third place, because the American Government can never guarantee freedom from its own abuses, for no one is just to his own prejudices; and in the fourth place, because an American government is not a just recompense for the bloody sacrifices of the Philippine people, who have carried on four years of war, since 1895, in order to sustain a government of their own. American government over the Philippines is an injustice, and injustice is neither acceptable nor loved."

It will be universally admitted that Senator HOAR is an uncompromising supporter and advocate of independence for the Filipinos. His numerous speeches do not admit of a double or a doubtful interpretation on this or any other question. He differs from Señor Buencamino and his present policy as much as light from darkness, or righteousness from sin. Well, then, this is what Don Felipe said last October to Congressman GAINES:

Q. Did you ever read the speeches of Senator HOAR?

BUENCAMINO. He is better fitted and has divined the conditions in the Philippines better than any other man.

Q. His speeches better define the conditions, possibilities, etc., of the Philippines than any other speeches?

BUENCAMINO. The best of all.

Q. You are willing and your people are willing to stand by Senator HOAR and what Senator HOAR wants, and that is what you want and your people want, and nothing else will satisfy you?

BUENCAMINO. Yes.

(CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 6965.)

Could inconsistency go further? The man apparently agrees with everybody. Will not some American—some expansionist—in the interests of common decency endeavor to induce Señor Buencamino to retire into private life?

To prophesy with any reasonable assurance of fulfillment is usually difficult. But it is easy to prophesy that Señor Buencamino will once again be as loud in his denunciation of American sovereignty as he now is in its praise. That which is true within the limits of experience is probably true beyond those limits. Thus we have:

Long live the friars!
Long live General Weyler!
Long live Spain!
Down with Rizal and his "ignoble face!"
Down with the friars!
Down with Weyler!
Down with Spain!
Long live Aguinaldo!
Long live the Philippine republic!
Down with Aguinaldo!
Down with the Philippine republic!
Long live Rizal!
Long live Governor Taft, "the idol of the people!"
Long live American sovereignty!
The above is history; the following is prophecy:
Down with Presbyterianism!
Down with Governor Taft!
Down with American sovereignty!
Long live the Catholic religion!
Long live the Philippine republic!
Above all, long live and prosper Felipe Buencamino!

I have said that Señor Buencamino has never praised me. I was wrong. He has never publicly praised me, for which I am thankful. But since writing the above I find that in a private letter to my sister, written last July, he says; "Your brother Sixto is, of all our champions abroad, the most patriotic and the most judicious." I am sorry for this. I thought I had escaped; but who shall escape Don Felipe's praise? It is as universal as sin, as lavish as redemption, as loathsome as disease. But why should I complain when Rizal has had to suffer it? Besides, although I am "the most judicious," and although I am "working in good faith," Señor Buencamino told the committee that I am "entirely wrong!" Thank you, Don Felipe! I much prefer your blame to your praise.

I think I have now fairly substantiated my statement that Señor Buencamino is a modern Barber of Seville and Vicar of Bray rolled into one, and that he has been "All things to all men in the ascendant." Some day we shall erect a monument to Don Felipe, and on it we shall place this inscription: "Here lies the man who agrees with you!"

With apologies for the length of this letter.

Sincerely, yours, SIXTO LOPEZ.

Mr. Chairman, I have read in the morning papers that on yesterday this man Buencamino was in the city of Canton, Ohio, where he visited the tomb of the late President McKinley. He first visited Mrs. McKinley at her home, and we are told that after shedding a few tears and making a fulsome address he proceeded to the tomb where lie the mortal remains of the late President. When he reached that sacred spot his feelings so overcame him that he again burst into tears. It may be of interest to, if it does not astonish, some of the admirers of Mr. McKinley to learn that this man once addressed a memorial to this Congress in which he charged President McKinley with the direct responsibility for the breaking out of hostilities between the American and Filipino forces in the Philippine Islands.

This is what he wrote.

Therefore it is plain that it can not be claimed that by reason of your victories over the Spaniards rights of conquest accrue to you as being due from the Filipinos, for the all-sufficient reason that you were not engaged in war with us between the 1st of May, 1898, and the 4th of February, 1900, during the night of which latter date your forces, in accordance with the orders of President William McKinley, commenced hostilities against our forces for the purpose of establishing American sovereignty in our archipelago by force of arms.

Can my Republican friends conceive of the man writing this who on yesterday shed those hypocritical and crocodile tears at the tomb of McKinley?

Mr. Chairman, I shall not weary the House by reading anything further as to the character of this man. I simply want to call attention again to the fact that the able and distinguished chairman of the Insular Affairs Committee was obliged to base his statement that the Filipinos contemplated the wholesale massacre of Americans at Manila upon the unsupported statement of this man, a man denounced by General Otis as a turncoat, and all things to all men. I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, the questions which are fairly presented in the pending bill and the proposed minority substitute, are whether we are going to impose upon the Philippine people a government, which can enact no legislation without the consent of a commission appointed by a nation 7,000 miles from their shores, or whether we are going to assist the people of those islands, to form a government under which after eight years of experience, they are to become free and independent—whether we are to rule the Philippine Archipelago as a colony, or assist it in establishing an independent government, as we did in Cuba.

The principal virtue of the minority substitute is that it promises independence. It removes the doubts and fears which must exist in the minds of the Philippine people as to whether they will be ruled forever by a distant nation of another race. It will inspire that people with a hope for a destiny of their own, which is the laudable ambition of every distinct people.

At the close of the Spanish-American war we found ourselves in two widely separated foreign countries, one the island of Cuba, the other the Philippine Archipelago.

The people of both these countries had been for years fighting against the same injustice and tyranny, imposed by the same government.

Each had founded a republic modeled after those of the United States and Mexico. Each had exercised sovereignty over parts of their territory; that of the Philippine republic extending much further than that of the Cuban government.

The people of the Philippine Islands were equally as intelligent and capable of self-government as were those of the island of Cuba. At that time the feeling of both peoples to us was that of deep gratitude and intense devotion, engendered by our supposedly unselfish heroism in giving freedom to oppressed peoples.

We promised independence to the Cubans and thereby inspired confidence in our integrity and produced affection for our people. Congress refused to indicate what we would do with the Philippines, which caused distrust, fear, and hatred of our Government.

Some of our opponents say they recognize that the spirit of our institutions is the consent of the governed, and that ultimately they will give independence to the Philippine people, but they will not promise it.

If people are entitled to independence, why have they not the right to have it assured? Do we not, in determining our relations with other nations, want every obligation specified? Even in private affairs, do we leave obligations in doubt or to the discretion of the other party? Does not uncertainty lead to difficulty?

How would you like a distant people of an alien race to take possession of your country while you were fighting for liberty, and tell you that although according to their form of government you are entitled at some time to independence, they will promise you nothing, especially when you had helped them defeat a common enemy?

What would you have thought of France if, after sending troops to assist us in defeating her old enemy in 1776, she had made a treaty with Great Britain by which in consideration of $20,000,000 she had purchased the thirteen colonies of America for herself? Could you then have had any confidence in France? Would not such conduct have compelled you to despise that country far more than you had ever hated England? Would it not have forced you to fight France to the bitter end?

I have never yet heard an American say, that if he were a Filipino he would not fight for independence as the people of the Philippine Islands have done.

Sir, there is not an American in all our 45 States, who would not fight with determination and desperation against a foreign foe that landed on our shore.

In view of this sentiment, how can our opponents hope for a vindication of their course in history? After the fever of war has subsided and the sense of reason and justice has returned, how can they expect an indorsement from the liberty-loving people of America of their Philippine policy?

Had we stated at the time we made the treaty with Spain, that we purchased the Philippine Islands to give the people thereof independence, we would have had the same conditions there as exist in Cuba to-day. We would have had no war, no loss of thousands of soldiers, no expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars, and no loss of confidence in our integrity, but we would have had the warm affection of a grateful people. And if we now promise them independence the war will cease, our soldiers return home, the drain on the Treasury end, and we will receive the plaudits of every liberty-loving people in the world.

INALIENABLE RIGHTS INVOLVED.

There is at stake in this policy the very principles of the Declaration of Independence. The principles promulgated by that instrument are true or they are lies. Men either are or are not equal before the law. They are or are not entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Governments either derive or do not derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. If you negative these propositions, our theory of Government is gone. If you permanently deprive the Philippine people of self-government, then you declare that governments do not derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, but from force.

Powers of government are either assumed or delegated. All powers not delegated are assumed, and all assumed powers are usurpations.

If the principles of the Declaration of Independence are the true principles of government, then republics are right and monarchies are wrong, and every violation of those truths is a wrong against humanity.

Since the dawn of civilization, in every government there has been an incessant conflict between the principles of monarchies and republics.

In monarchies, at times the people have wrested from the crown some rights and privileges, and in republics, the executive has at times gradually assumed power through the influence of the privileged classes.

In each government there have always been two political parties, one demanding increased power for the executive, and the other increased power for the people. One for the centralization of power, the other for power in the component parts. In a republic, it is the same contest on a minature scale as that between the king and his subjects.

The growth of the power of the executive in a republic is slow and gradual, so gradual that when the usurpation is made it is no usurpation except in name. Cæsar, as president of the Roman senate, had as much arbitrary power as he would have possessed had he taken the crown on the Lupercal.

The change in power from the monarch to the people is the reverse of the growth of executive power. It does not come until the acts of the monarch have become so arbitrary and unjust as to produce revolution.

Nearly every important question that arises in a republic when carried to its final analysis, resolves itself into a measure tending to the increase or decrease of executive power. It may be concealed in privileges to a class, but the privileged classes are always the advocates of greater executive power.

Gentlemen scout the idea of imperialism, but they must remember that there has come a time in the history of every republic which existed long when the power of the executive was so enlarged that usurpation became easy and was successfully accomplished. No truer statement was ever made than that "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

Let us not begin our downfall by discarding the Declaration of Independence.

WHO ARE THE PATRIOTS?

Mr. Chairman, the imperialists charge us with being unpatriotic, because we criticise the course of the Administration, in assuming sovereignty over territory without the consent of its inhabitants, in retaining as a part of this country distant islands inhabited by an alien and undesirable race, and in subjugating a people in their own country who never did us any harm, and whose only offense is their love for that same liberty and independence for which our forefathers were willing to sacrifice fortune, home, and even life itself.

They admit that it is proper at some stage of the proceedings to consider a question of such momentous consequences to our institutions and welfare, but whenever the question arises they then tell us it is unpatriotic to discuss it at this time.

I.

They contended before the ratification of the peace treaty with Spain, that it was no time then to discuss what we should do with the Philippine Islands; that if we rejected the treaty, it meant we were still in a state of war with Spain, and that it was unpatriotic not to conclude a treaty of peace; that all agreed the islands should be wrested from the tyranny of Spanish rule, and to reject the treaty would place the Philippine people in bondage to Spain forever.

The President, in his message to the Senate which accompanied the treaty, used these words: "Do not talk about it now, but after you have ratified the treaty then it will be in order to consider whether or not we shall permanently hold the Philippine Islands." That was the argument of nearly every Senator who urged the ratification of the treaty.

II.

Mr. Chairman, an insurrection broke out in the islands, caused by the President, before the ratification of the treaty, sending a proclamation to General Otis, which ordered him to take possession of the country as a part of the United States and assume sovereignty over its people. Sir, that was a declaration of war to a people who were struggling for independence. It was while this insurrection was in operation, that the Administration contended it was unpatriotic to talk about whether we should hold the archipelago when men were in arms against us; that for heaven's sake let us suppress the insurrection and then we can determine what is best to be done with the islands; that talk of giving them independence encourages them to believe they can win, and therefore to keep up the struggle.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, do not gentlemen know that all the talk for a century of giving the Filipinos independence could not produce an effect equal to those few lines contained in the Declaration of Independence which say:

> That to secure these (inalienable) rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness

Is the Declaration of Independence an unpatriotic document? Can it be unpatriotic to invoke its principles? It is not that the Filipinos do not know the justice of their cause, or have heard of speeches made by Americans advocating independence of the islands for the good of our own country, which encourages them to believe they can win and hence to keep up the struggle.

But, sir, even if such charges were true, should we let the far greater questions arising from such a policy, which involve the welfare of our people and a change in our own form of government, become settled without protest or discussion?

Is it patriotic in us, who believe great calamity to our country will result from such a policy, to wait until you have riveted the chains of colonial empire upon our limbs, and effected the beginning of the downfall of the American Republic? Bloodshed, as horrible as it may be, would in its consequences be insignificant compared to the evils resulting from such a policy.

But, sir, it is not true that talk of giving the Philippine people independence encourages them to believe they can win, and hence to keep up the struggle. If they know anything, they should know to keep up the war jeopardizes the chances of adoption of the policy of giving them independence, because there are some people here who will be deceived as to the true question involved by this very claim.

Can a sentence be found in any speech delivered in Congress, which even suggests that the United States is not strong enough to conquer or even annihilate the Filipinos? Are people encouraged to keep on fighting us when they know we are considering whether it is not best for our own country to give them independence? Do people usually prejudice their cause in that manner?

What is it, then, that keeps up the war in the islands?

It is the declarations so often made that we will whip the Filipinos into submission, without promising them anything, cost what it may; that they are an uncivilized race—the Apaches of the Orient, and are not entitled to the rules of civilized warfare.

It is in the action of those officers, who disgrace their uniforms by murdering prisoners of war, burning barrios and villages, and torturing men to extort information against their own people. We know that such acts do not represent either the Army or the American people; but if you were a Filipino who had felt the bitterness of such a wrong, could you resist the desire to fight?

If you were a Filipino, which line of talk and action would encourage you to continue the struggle? Would not such threats and cruelties make you determined to fight even unto death? Do you imagine that human nature is not the same the world over?

Have the Filipinos not "eyes, hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions; fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same summer and winter as you are? If you prick them, do they not bleed? If you tickle them, do they not laugh? If you poison them, do they not die? And if you wrong them, will they not revenge? If they are like you in the rest, they will resemble you in that."

It is such disparaging declarations, such threats and acts, that keep up the insurrection. To produce conciliation one act of kindness is worth a world of cruelty.

Although it is clear it was not the voice of those who advocated independence to the Filipinos for our own country's good, that encouraged them to believe they could win, and hence keep up the struggle; it is also plain that it was the voice of those who threatened to conquer the Filipinos at any price, together with the inhuman acts referred to, which made the Filipinos continue the insurrection.

III.

Mr. Chairman, about two years ago we had two or three official declarations from Manila that the war was over, the insurrection suppressed. We then thought that surely the time had at last arrived, when it was proper to discuss the question, as to whether it was not best for our own country and necessary to the perpetuity of republican institutions to give the Philippine people their independence.

Sir, it was then the imperialists began to claim that it was too late to talk about surrendering territory once acquired by the United States; that those Democrats who voted for the treaty were estopped from talking about surrendering sovereignty; that by that act we took an irrevocable step, and that we must never pull down the American flag; that it is perfectly proper for the Democrats to discuss and make an issue upon the conduct of the war, but it is traitorous to talk of hauling down the American flag.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, we hauled down the American flag only a few days ago in Cuba. Is Theodore Roosevelt a traitor because he hauled it down? It went up as the ensign of freedom; it came down as the symbol of liberty. It becomes more glorious because it did come down, as it could not remain there in honor.

It was hauled down from the walls of Pekin two years ago. Was President McKinley a traitor? It was hauled down at Quebec, at Chapultepec, on the border of Maine, on the border of Alaska, and at other places. Have we had so many traitors in our country?

Sir, is it too late to talk of independence of the Philippines, if their annexation to our country is a detriment to us, if their inhabitants are a menace to American citizenship, if their retention is weakening to our military power—if the holding of them makes us a colonial empire and changes our form of government?

How paradoxical it is to contend it unpatriotic for one to do what he believes is for the best interest of his country. It is never too late either in the individual or in a nation to correct a mistake, or to confess a wrong.

Mr. Chairman, some imperialists admit that we should never have acquired the Philippine Islands; that it is contrary to the spirit of our institutions; but, they say, we are there; we can not afford to stop the war and withdraw from the islands; that we would become the laughing stock of the world; that it would injure our prestige. The analysis of that argument is that as we started wrong, we must keep on doing wrong. Could there be a loss of prestige for the giant to stop whipping the child and loosen his grasp, so it could be free, especially after the giant had announced that the child was no longer fighting?

Did Great Britain lose prestige when, even after defeat at Majuba Hill, it recognized the independence of the South African Republic? It was at that time Gladstone said, Great Britain is big enough to do what is right. It is the policy of Sir Joseph Chamberlain which has lowered the prestige of the British Empire.

The contention that we would become the laughing stock of the nations of the world, is as the suggestion to the young man contemplating a Christian life, that he would become the subject of ridicule to his companions. It is the old argument of the devil to prevent the reformation of his victim.

The United States of America is great enough to do what is right.

IV.

Mr. Chairman, within the last six months we have heard of officers who have ordered the burning of barrios and villages, the torture of victims to extort information against their countrymen, and the killing of prisoners of war because they did not give information as to what herbs were good to eat.

When these outrages are denounced as diabolical, you then pretend that we are unpatriotic and claim that we are against the Army.

Can you not realize that it is no more of an attack upon the Army to denounce officers who disgrace their uniforms, than it is an assault upon society to condemn murderers and highwaymen? Why do we punish criminals? For the protection of society. It is for the protection of the Army that those who commit inhuman acts are denounced. As a community which will not comdemn criminals falls into disrepute, so will the entire Army fall into disrepute unless its criminals are punished. It is a duty to the good men and officers of the Army that these inhuman monsters are punished.

Can you not recognize that it is the duty of Senators and Representatives to investigate the operation of every department of the Government, and condemn abuses wherever they appear.

You have been warned time and again, that such horrors would be the inevitable consequence of a war of conquest against an alien race.

I warn you now, as all history teaches, that a war of subjugation is bound to produce anarchy at home; that you can not as a nation ruthlessly trample upon the inalienable rights of others, without implanting in the individual the doctrine that might is right, which is the argument of every highwayman and of every criminal who inflicts a wrong upon another. We can not enforce that doctrine collectively and hope to escape from the horrors of individual application.

We are as certain to pay the penalty for the violation of the law of our own being, as that consequence will follow cause.

Upon whom, then, should fall the condemnation of the people? Sir, upon the heads of those who have advocated a policy which, according to all human experiences, was sure to produce such terrible and fatal results.

So it seems, no matter what position one takes upon the Philippine problem, unless he indorses the policy of the Administration, horrible in its morals and consequences as it may be, he is denounced as unpatriotic and by some as a traitor.

TEST OF PATRIOTISM.

The contention is made that we must at all times uphold and encourage the Administration when in war. Although true as to a defensive war and also as to one, irrespective of cause, which has culminated in a war of self-preservation, yet it is not true as to a war of conquest and subjugation. The doctrine of peace on earth, good will to men can not be annulled by a dogma which sanctions forcible annexation—criminal aggression.

Mr. Chairman, if such a doctrine were sound, every protest by peace-loving people against diabolical wars would be traitorous.

In protesting against war the intention of the party is the controlling factor to determine his status. If his object is to injure his own country, if his action is prompted by affection for the enemy, then truly would he be unpatriotic though not a traitor as the essential element, an overt act, required by our Constitution would be lacking. The test, therefore, as to whether one is a patriot or a traitor in heart is whether his utterances are intended for the welfare or detriment of his country, for the upbuilding or destruction of the principles of his government, and are prompted by love for his own or the foreign people.

If his object is to prevent the carrying out of a policy, which he believes will result in injury to his own country and in years produce a change in the form of his Government, his protest is the very highest form of patriotism. In fact, the man who believes that dire consequences will follow the adoption of such a policy, is a traitor in heart if he does not lift his voice to prevent such calamity.

In the war with the Filipinos, the sole object of those who have criticised the Administration, has been the greatest good for our own people and country. No one in either branch of Congress has ever had any affection for, or even intimate relation with the people of the Philippines. Except from a purely humanitarian standpoint, we do not care a fig for the Philippine people. We are, in fact, so free from affection for them, that we do not want to have any political relations whatever with them.

Sir, to charge men whose actions are prompted by the highest good to our own country, as being copperheads and traitors is as diabolical a slander as was ever uttered.

Who are the patriots? Are they those who want to govern a people by force, or those who recognize inalienable rights in man? Are they those who would repeal the Declaration of Independence, or those who regard its principles as self-evident truths? Are they those who regard that instrument as an incendiary document, or those who believe it a divine inspiration? Are they those who would run the hazard of imperialism, which all history teaches results from colonial empire, or those who wish to perpetuate the blessings of a republic? Are they those who would abandon the Monroe doctrine for oriental provinces, to be governed and taxed without representation, or those who wish the United States to continue to be the beacon light of liberty to every oppressed people on the face of the globe? Are they those who want to annex distant islands which can never pay, or those who desire to protect the Treasury from such depletion? Are they those who would plunge the Government into another race problem, or those who do not wish American citizenship degraded by Malay peoples of tropical climes? Are they those who would develop distant lands where our people can not labor, or those who desire its capital to be used in developing our own industries? Are they those who are willing that the military power of our country should be weakened by the annexation of territory 7,000 miles from our base of supply, or those who desire only territory contiguous to our borders? Are they those who have crushed the only republic of the Orient, or those who would respect the high aspirations of another people for liberty, freedom, and independence?

Mr. Chairman, impartial history will determine, that the true patriots are those Americans, who love their country too well to let it do wrong; too well to suffer it to violate the principles of the Declaration of Independence; too well to allow it to repudiate government of the people, for the people, and by the people; too well to permit it to be wrecked upon the rocks and shoals of colonial empire.

Let us preserve our glorious country as

The land of the free
And the home of the brave.

[Loud and continued applause on the Democratic side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HILL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 4949. An act to provide for the classification of the salaries of clerks employed in post-offices of the first and second classes;

S. 5678. An act providing for a record of deeds and other conveyances and instruments of writing in Indian Territory, and for other purposes; and

S. 6148. An act providing for the resurvey of certain townships in San Diego County, Cal.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate its message disagreeing to the amendment of and asking a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill (S. 4284) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota,'" approved January 14, 1889.

PHILIPPINE GOVERNMENT.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to record my protest against the passage of any bill which seeks to set up government over a foreign people with whom we have never had political union and against their wishes.

Upon every occasion that has offered, and so far as the circumstances have permitted, I have voted against the unprovoked, unholy, and unjust war being waged by the President against the Filipinos. In my judgment, the President has no right to wage such a war.

Section 8 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, in which is a definition of the powers of Congress, says that it (and it alone) shall have authority—

To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water.

Congress has never declared war against the people of the Philippine Islands. Yet it is notorious that a state of war between the people of those islands and the administrators of the Government of the United States has existed since February, 1899.

The Secretary of War, in a recently published document, admits that this Government has spent nearly $200,000,000 in the prosecution of military enterprises in those far-away islands.

From the viewpoint of the taxpayers such an extravagant use of the public funds lifts the Philippine adventure out of the category of insurrection and gives it the dignity of war. Is this not a palpable violation of the Constitution and a repudiation of the solemn oath taken by the chief executive officers of the Government?

No matter from what direction you approach it, Mr. Chairman, this whole Philippine mess is repulsive. It has led us into cruelties, and it has caused us to deny the most sacred American beliefs.

George Washington, who has, it appears, gone out of fashion, warned us against entangling alliances. But now comes the dominant party with the foolish boast that because we have been brutally successful in slaying untrained and badly armed Malays, who have never harmed us, who were, in fact, almost to a man, ignorant of our existence until we sent our men and arms to their country, and of whom we in this country were almost as ignorant, we have become a "world power," and that there has been lodged upon us the undesirable responsibilities of this new dignity.

We are told that we occupy the most valued strategic point from which to exercise military and commercial control in China. If we have really secured such a position, if we have fought for it and spent hundreds of millions of dollars to get it, will we not be foolish not to use it? And if we do use it to prize open the door of China, are we not sure to find on the other side of that door the Russian bear snarling its defiance of the British lion, while the German eagle is watching the game with the hope of carrying off a full share of the prey? Will these conditions not force us into alliances, commercial and military, defensive and offensive; and if so, what becomes of Washington and his warning?

And will it pay, Mr. Chairman? To lay aside the question of right and morality, to shut our eyes to the wickedness of such a course, to forget, as we seem to have forgotten, that it is righteousness which exalteth a nation, and, to consider it from the lowest, basest, point of view, will it pay in dollars and cents?

No man who will read and reflect upon the returns from the alleged great trade of the East will say that we can make a profit from it that will be commensurate to the outlay. It is insignificant now and not specially alluring as to its future development.

The standard of living in the Far East is so very low and so fixed by the habits of centuries that neither the Filipinos, the Chinese, nor the Japanese will ever become valuable customers.

Leroy Beaulieu, in his Awakening of the East, says that in many of the Japanese factories, which exclusively employ women and children, the highest average wages paid are 15 sen, or 7½ cents a day. Those of greater skill earn 9 cents a day, and those of the greatest skill make 14 cents a day. In China it is worse.

Humble as is the standard of living in Central and South America, it is luxurious compared with that of China and Japan, and yet we are chasing the ignis fatuus of oriental trade and trying to rape it with sword and torch, while we neglect the more promising field on our own continent, at our very doors, which only needs peaceful and intelligent cultivation to return abundant harvests.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that there are many gentlemen in this House and in the other House who in their consciences condemn the course of the Administration and deplore its Philippine policy. And yet, blinded by greed and partisanship, they give it their support.

Oh, Mr. Chairman, what a great thing it would be for our country if they would only vote as they think!

The Republican platform of 1856 said:

Resolved, That the maintenance of the principles promulgated in the Declaration of Independence and embodied in the Federal Constitution is essential to the preservation of our republican institutions.

Resolved, That the highwayman's plea that "might makes right," embodied in the Ostend circular, was in every respect unworthy of American diplomacy, and would bring shame and dishonor upon any government or people that gave it their sanction.

Observe, sir, that it says "that the maintenance of the principles promulgated in the Declaration of Independence and embodied in the Federal Constitution" is essential to the preservation of our republican institutions. Since then the party seems to be of a different way of thinking. What are those principles?

The second paragraph of that great writing says:

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal—

That is, entitled to equal civil rights—that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

It is notorious, Mr. Chairman, that at a huge expense in money and a terrific sacrifice of life we have been engaged for three and a half years in an effort to compel the Filipino people to accept our sovereignty. At this very moment we are legislating for the Filipinos and against their wishes, the testimony of Buencamino and other Philippine Benedict Arnolds to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Republican party at this very moment is repudiating the Declaration of Independence and solemnly declaring that they shall not enjoy life and liberty and pursue happiness in their own way. Right now the Republican party is denying the doctrine of Jefferson, that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. Contrast its position of to-day with that of the platform of 1856.

I ask the privilege of having printed here an extract from the Republican platform of 1860. I do so to show that that great party still believed in the American doctrines when Mr. Lincoln was first nominated:

Resolved, That the maintenance of the principles promulgated in the Declaration of Independence and embodied in the Federal Constitution, "that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed," is essential to the preservation of our republican institutions.

Very recently, Mr. Chairman, two republics, two real republics, founded by a brave, an honest, and an intelligent, Christian people, were murdered in South Africa.

The Republican party, which tendered its sympathy to the Cubans in 1868, had no words of cheer for the Boers during their great fight for freedom.

If ever a people deserved to succeed it was the Dutch in South Africa. It is no disparagement of other nations to say that while they also have done well in battle, the Boers have excelled them all. A timely resolution of sympathy by the Congress of the United States, such as was given to Greece and to the countries of South America, would have caused a different ending of the war in South Africa, and two republics would now be where there is a desolate, despairing colony of the same Crown which shed the blood of Americans at Lexington and Valley Forge. It was the Republican majority in this House which prevented the passage of such a resolution.

This extract from the platform of 1868 shows how the Republicans of that period would have treated the Boer question:

This convention declares itself in sympathy with all oppressed people who are struggling for their rights. We recognize the great principles laid down in the immortal Declaration of Independence as the true foundation of democratic government, and we hail with gladness every effort toward making these principles a living reality on every inch of American soil.

Even so late as 1876 it was still an American party, as this extract from the platform of that year will show:

The United States of America is a nation, not a league. By the combined workings of the national and State governments, under their respective constitutions, the rights of every citizen are secured at home and abroad, and the common welfare promoted. The Republican party has preserved these governments to the one hundredth anniversary of the nation's birth, and they are now embodiments of the great truths spoken at its cradle—"that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that for the attainment of these ends governments have been instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." Until these truths are cheerfully obeyed, or, if need be, vigorously enforced, the work of the Republican party is unfinished.

The work of the Republican party, so far as the fight for liberty is concerned, seems to have been finished.

The platform of 1884 had this to say:

Resolved, That appointments by the President to offices in the Territories should be made from the bona fide citizens and residents of the Territories which they are to serve.

That doctrine is now also denied. A government of carpetbaggers has been set up in the Philippines. God help the Filipinos!

If the ravages of war have left them anything, the carpetbaggers will get it.

In the South, Mr. Chairman, where we knew them and felt them, "besom of destruction" has ceased to be a figure of speech to describe certain bad conditions. Out of the bitterness of experience we say "as bad as carpetbaggery." Nothing could be worse.

Here is what the Republicans had to say about statehood in 1888:

The government by Congress of the Territories is based upon necessity, only to the end that they may become States in the Union; therefore, whenever the conditions of population, material resources, public intelligence, and morality are such as to insure stable local government therein, the people of such Territories would be permitted, as a right inherent in them, to form for themselves constitutions and State governments, and be admitted into Union. Pending the preparation for statehood, all officers thereof should be selected from bona fide residents and citizens of the Territory wherein they are to serve.

New Mexico, Arizona, and Oklahoma, notwithstanding this and later platform declarations, are still outside the Union.

Will the Republican party bring the Philippine Islands and their 10,000,000 people into this Union of States, with the full rights of American citizens, or is it intended to govern them perpetually as dependent colonies and to treat the Filipinos as a subject race?

Now, let us see what the platform of 1892 had to say.

We favor the admission of the remaining Territories at the earliest possible date, having due regard to the interests of the people of the Territories and of the United States. All the Federal officers appointed for the Territories should be selected from the bona fide residents thereof, and the right of self-government should be accorded as far as possible. The Republican party has always been the champion of the oppressed, and recognizes the dignity of manhood, irrespective of faith, color, or nationality; it sympathizes with the cause of home rule in Ireland, and protests against the persecution of the Jews in Russia.

Again the system of carpetbagism is condemned. Republican leaders had not been tempted by mines of gold, fields of rice and sugar, and valuable timbers in the Philippines. "The Republican party has always been the champion of the oppressed, and recognizes the dignity of manhood, irrespective of faith, color, or nationality." That plank also has been repealed. The heart which bled for the black slave in America is hardened against the brown patriot in the Philippines.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I will insert an Associated Press dispatch which appeared in the Washington Post on the 19th of this month:

MANILA, June 18.

Col. Frank D. Baldwin, of the Twenty-seventh Infantry, who is stationed on the island of Mindanao, has written a letter to the Sultan of Bacolod, in which he sets forth the intentions of the American authorities. Colonel Baldwin said, among other things, that the Americans did not intend interfering with the religion, plurality of wives, or property of the Moros. The following reply has been received from the Sultan by Colonel Baldwin:

"We ask you to retire to Malabang; we do not want you in the Lake Lanao district unless you will join our religion and adopt our customs. In case you do not so desire, all the datos will make war on you, because here there is but one religion, that of Stamboul."

Colonel Baldwin says that the Sultans of Bacolod and Massin will have to be taken prisoners before permanent peace in Mindanao is possible.

So it appears that we now have under our flag, if not under the Constitution, all sorts and conditions of men.

Here we have a recognition of royal titles, forbidden by our Constitution, and of polygamy, which is forbidden by the conscience of the American people. The "property" referred to is, I do not doubt, the slaves owned by the Moro chiefs.

Just one extract more to show the position of the Republican party, in 1896, before it had the change of heart and yielded to the lust of conquest:

We watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of the Cuban patriots against cruelty and oppression, and our best hopes go out for the full success of their determined contest for liberty. We favor the admission of the remaining Territories at the earliest practicable date, having due regard to the interests of the people of the Territories and of the United States. All the Federal officers appointed for the Territories should be selected from bona fide residents thereof, and the right of self-government should be accorded as far as possible.

Freedom with a string to it has been granted to the Cubans. Just to the limit of the chain fastened on the Cuban Republic by the Platt amendment the people of that island are to be permitted to exercise the rights of a sovereign nation. There has not been a full and honest redemption of the promise of 1896.

The methods pursued in the conquered province are being reluctantly given to the public.

Without comment, as it speaks for itself, I will print here a recent publication, also taken from the Washington Post:

ORDER TO GENERAL SMITH—WILL BE PUT IN COMMAND OF DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS—COURSE IN SAMAR WAS UPHELD—THE PRESIDENT, AFTER HIS REVIEW OF THE CASE, MAY DISAPPROVE THE FINDINGS, BUT CAN NOT NOW IMPOSE ANY PUNISHMENT BEYOND CRITICISM—ADMISSIONS BY THE ACCUSED AT THE TRIAL.

Announcement was made at the War Department yesterday that Brig. Gen. Jacob H. Smith will be immediately ordered to proceed to San Francisco and will then be placed in command of the military department of Texas. This action of the Department dispels any doubt that may have existed as to the findings of the court which tried General Smith for his conduct of the campaign in Samar. He has been acquitted, and so far as the court is concerned there will be no further proceedings against him. It now remains for the President to review the case, and he is expected to make public his views in the course of ten days. He may disapprove the findings of the court and strongly condemn General Smith's work in Samar, but there can now be no punishment save in the way of criticism.

The record, which the President has received, contains the exact language of the admissions made by Colonel Woodruff, counsel for General Smith, in regard to the orders which the latter officer issued to Major Waller, United States Marines. The charge was "conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline," and it was supported by this specification:

In that Brig. Gen. Jacob H. Smith, United States Army, commanding general of the Sixth Separate Brigade, Division of the Philippines, did give instructions in regard to the conduct of hostilities in the island of Samar, Philippine Islands, to his subordinate officer, Maj. L. W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps, the said Major Waller being under his command and commanding at the time a subterritorial district in the island of Samar, Philippine Islands, in language and words to wit: "I want no prisoners" (meaning thereby that giving of quarter was not desired or required), and "I wish you to kill and burn. The more you kill and burn the better you will please me," and "the interior of Samar must be made a howling wilderness," and did give further instructions to said Major Waller that he, General Smith, wanted all persons killed who were capable of bearing arms, and did, in reply to a question by the said Major Waller, asking for an age limit, designate the age limit at 10 years.

This at or near the island of Samar, P. I., between the 23d and 28th days of October, 1901.

SMITH'S PLEA AND ADMISSIONS.

The record then gives General Smith's plea to the charge and specifications, which was "not guilty." Colonel Woodruff's statement, which was partially cabled at the time it was made, is then given in full, as follows:

"The accused desires to simplify this case as much as possible, and admits that he was commanding general of the Sixth Separate Brigade, Division of the Philippines; that Major Waller was one of his subordinate officers, commanding a subterritorial district, and that he did give him personal instructions relating to hostiles under arms in the field, and he did instruct him not to burden himself with prisoners, of which General Smith already had so many that the efficiency of his command was impaired, and tell him that he wanted him to kill and burn in the interior and hostile country, and did further instruct him that the interior of Samar must be made a howling wilderness, and did further instruct him that he wanted all persons killed who were capable of bearing arms and were actively engaged in hostilities, and that he did designate the age limit at 10 years, as boys of that age were actively engaged in hostilities against the United States authorities, and were equally dangerous as an enemy as those of more mature age."

The record then shows that the judge-advocate asked this question:

"Does the accused admit that as his statement?"

"I do," was the response of General Smith.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I submit for the information of the House the following memorial:

BOSTON, June 10, 1902.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned would respectfully represent that they are a committee appointed at a recently held meeting of persons, irrespective of party, interested in the policy pursued by the United States toward the Philippine Islands and the inhabitants thereof. As such, they were instructed to investigate the condition of affairs connected therewith, and take such subsequent action as might seem expedient. Having, to a certain extent, performed this duty, they now submit the following

MEMORIAL.

It is not our present purpose to discuss any controverted questions connected with events which have recently taken place in the Philippine Islands, or to call in question the policy which either has been pursued by the United States or which it is proposed to pursue in regard to these islands or the inhabitants thereof.

In the performance of the duties imposed upon us these matters have to a greater or less extent engaged our attention, and the results at which we arrive may not improbably be brought to your notice at some future time. Certain facts, however, which seem to us of much import, are not open to dispute. To these, and the conclusions to be drawn from them—as to us the exigency seems great and immediate—we now respectfully invite your attention.

It is apparent that as an outcome of the policy and course of action hitherto pursued, which may or may not have met the approval of those we represent, certain things have resulted: The United States, as a nation, has assumed charge of communities of Asiatic descent, occupying many islands of an archipelago at a great distance from our nearest continental possessions. Those communities, numbering millions, are of a race wholly distinct from ourselves, with other traditions and habits, speaking foreign and, in many cases, unknown tongues. The acquisition of the Philippine Islands and their inhabitants, while imposing on us treaty obligations, has been followed by prolonged warlike operations marked by acts of fierce resistance, not quickly overcome on the part of the Filipinos, and by military severities on our part of a character unprecedented in our annals. Those islands are now held by us partly under military law and partly under civil authority, but in absolute subjection.

In the course of this mixed administration of affairs no inconsiderable degree of friction has existed, and apparently still does exist, between our military and our civil representatives. Such could, indeed, hardly be avoided. In the prosecution of military movements the establishment of camps of concentration for the inhabitants of large districts has been thought expedient, and the people of those districts of both sexes and all ages thus gathered from their homes and usual vocations have therein been compelled to live, with sanitary results concerning which only very indefinite information has been received. In the course of military operations, also, large regions have been devastated, towns have been burned, and the food supply of the country destroyed. It has hence resulted that when the inhabitants have been returned from the camps of concentration to their former places of abode they have found their shelters gone and the means of subsistence greatly impaired or wholly lacking. It is known that the epidemics usually and, indeed, inevitably incident to such a state of affairs are now raging in the islands, though only very partial statistics as respects mortality are made public, if, indeed, they are in any wise obtainable. Extensive districts inhabited by our dependents have thus been scourged, and are now stricken with war, famine, and pestilence.

For the people thus afflicted, whether excusably or otherwise, America stands responsible. That responsibility can not be evaded. Those people have, moreover, no means of communicating directly with us. Removed by the width of an ocean, they are unable to make their situation known, whether to ask for aid and relief or to obtain redress of grievances, if such exist. They have not been invited, perhaps not even permitted, to speak unless they seemed to approve of our doings. But they are still our subjugated dependents. To us, and to us only, can they look, and from our decision they have no appeal.

Such being, as we understand, the undisputed facts, we desire respectfully to represent that the Congress of the United States, as the supreme lawmaking authority, is of necessity the grand inquest of the American people. It alone possesses the power necessary adequately to deal with a situation such as now exists.

The inquiry at present being carried on by one of your honorable bodies has unquestionably been productive of valuable results; results the far-reaching importance of which, both to the people of this country and to the Filipinos, it would in our judgment not be easy to exaggerate. But that inquiry has also demonstrated to us, and we think must have satisfied all careful observers of its course, that no inquiry instituted in this country and carried on under similar limitations can possibly meet full present requirements. It is plain that, at best, only odds and ends of evidence, stray scraps of information not always of unquestioned authenticity, are forthcoming or obtainable; the dependent communities are not represented; one side, in a conflict of races, debarred from testifying, remains and must remain substantially unheard, where not in a measure dumb. To reach any satisfactory results, inquisition must be made on the spot and among the people concerned—the dependents of the United States, our so-called subject races.

Under these circumstances did we ourselves, the undersigned, representing an unrecognized constituency and clad with no official authority, undertake to go out to the Philippine Archipelago, or to send there a committee of our number, we would have no power to gather evidence, to elicit facts, or to prescribe remedies. We could at best appear merely as volunteers, and, as such, would probably be ordered at once to return whence we came. It would be altogether otherwise with those coming from the Congress of the United States and members of it. Its delegates would represent the full dignity, authority, and power of the American people. To them every source of information would be accessible, while their mere presence would vastly improve the situation.

The facts being thus, we respectfully ask, on behalf of ourselves and those we represent, that the Congress of the United States will forthwith provide for the appointment of a committee of investigation of its own number, to proceed at the earliest practicable moment to the Philippine Archipelago, and there enter upon such an investigation as will cause the people of the United States to feel assured that full information is being elicited, that all grievances will be considered, that any measures necessary to the protection and a reestablished prosperity of our dependents will in due time be instituted, and that, in the light of the fullest possible knowledge of facts and conditions, the American people may form their judgment of the policy so far pursued, as well as that to be adopted for the future. We further desire to point out a full precedent for the appointment of such a joint Congressional committee of inquiry. In the year 1865, at the close of our civil war, when a state of affairs not altogether dissimilar to that in the Philippine Archipelago existed in the so-called Confederate States, cognizance was taken of the fact, and Congress, by a concurrent resolution of December 13, acting as the grand national inquest, appointed such a committee as is now suggested. Composed of six members on the part of the Senate and nine members on the part of the House of Representatives, William Pitt Fessenden, of Maine, was chairman on behalf of the former, and Thaddeus Stevens, of Pennsylvania, on behalf of the latter; while among those composing the committee were James W. Grimes, Jacob M. Howard, Reverdy Johnson, E. B. Washburne, Justin F. Morrill, Roscoe Conkling, and George S. Boutwell. The committee, thus composed, then made, as respects the region which had constituted the so-called Confederacy, an investigation similar in character to that we now ask for as respects the Philippine Archipelago.

We would, accordingly, petition your honorable bodies that such a joint special committee be now provided, and that it be of sufficient size to command public confidence by containing representatives of both parties and advocates of all different lines of policy, to the end that full information may be elicited and the greatest possible volume of varient light shed upon the duties and obligations which this people have had forced upon them or voluntarily assumed. We would further respectfully request that this committee be so constituted as to enable it to cover the entire field of investigation within the limited time at its disposal. To make this possible it should be accompanied by a body of experts, military and civil, representing the medical, sanitary, industrial, and other scientific phases involved in the great and complex problem to be considered, and upon which the committee will be called to pass intelligently.

On the spot, and in this way only, we submit, can the American people be properly and fully advised as to the duties and obligations now imposed upon them. As a portion of the people, realizing those obligations and impressed with a not undue sense of the responsibility which has been incurred, we submit this memorial and ask for it your early and favorable consideration.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs. Perhaps my colleague on the committee [Mr. CRUMPACKER] is now going to consume some time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have an understanding with the chairman of the committee that you are to consume some of your time. The arrangement was that I should close this afternoon on our side.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I understand there are seventy-two minutes due your side now. I did not know that the gentleman was probably going to occupy that much time. In other words, the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs told me that there would be two or three who would make short speeches on your side.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He told me before he went out that I would follow the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Very well. Then, Mr. Chairman, I yield to my colleague from Mississippi such time as he may desire out of the time left to our side.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, this is an august occasion; this is a great question, and this is a great arena in which to argue a great question. There has been some point in the life of every people which was the point of demarcation between the spirit of their institutions as they began and the spirit of their institutions as they ended. The population as a whole never know that they have reached this point until long after they have passed it. A great many people believe—I for one think that we have arrived at the place in the history of the United States which would bear that description, and that, unconsciously to the people, the soul of our Government has changed and we have already become a different Government, unless we are willing to retrace steps already taken. Mr. Chairman, it is curious to me, having listened to seven or eight great speeches from great men upon the Republican side, that not one of them has even so much as attempted to touch the question really at issue now and here before this body and before the American people. Gentlemen have talked upon both sides about this soldier and that officer, about the alleged iniquity of Aguinaldo, about the alleged treachery of Lopez, about Agoncillo's trip to Washington, and about "attacks upon the Army;" about everything except the question.

What is the question? It is this, and these two bills here embody the two policies here presented, one of which must be adopted: Shall we retain, under the sovereignty of the United States, by force if necessary, the Philippine Archipelago, either as Territory on its way to Statehood, or as a colony, an appendix, a dependency, and held by force if needful, and hold the population of all of the Philippine Islands, either as subjects "appurtenant," a late, new piece of phraseology, or in plain words, as subjects, or hold them to be embodied later on as citizens of the Republic?

That is one side of it. The other side is: Shall we lop off from the American body politic the Philippine Archipelago, with its large oriental population? Shall we find it to our interests to keep them for commercial reasons, for reasons of military prestige, for reasons of military honor and naval glory, or shall we, in the interest of the development and for the purpose of protecting American institutions, as we have heretofore known them, lop them off? Shall we, in the interest of the American people and of the people of the archipelago, as a matter of policy, hold them, or shall we leave them?

That is the question, and that is the only question, which is at issue. In the presence of that great question details sink into absolute insignificance—the details of your bill, the details of ours. I am free to admit that if you are going into the policy of permanently holding the Philippine Islands, regardless of the consent of the governed, regardless of the fact that their population can never become American citizens, regardless of the fact that they hate us and that we despise them, that about as good details as you could get for that despotic purpose are those of the bill presented by the majority, and just as little despotic as could be, to accomplish the purpose.

I am furthermore ready to admit, Mr. Chairman, that if you are going into tyranny you must take with the tyranny the tyrant's plea, necessity; and that if you are going to hold the Philippine Islands and rule them, regardless of all our past, all our boasted freedom and our boast of being "the friend of those struggling for independence and freedom everywhere," it will be a part of the necessity of the case to hold them by terrorism. There is no other way. Tyranny necessitates terrorism, especially when an unlimited power is to be exercised by a white race over a dark one in the dark man's country.

Mr. Chairman, this question is the issue presented, and, nevertheless, in every debate a wise debater acts like a contractor who has taken a contract to erect a building—he first removes the rubbish from the lot—and it becomes my duty, under the rules of this debate and in accordance with what is expected of me on my side, to attempt to remove some of the rubbish, to attempt to reply to some of the arguments which have been made on the other side, for the most part absolutely irrelevant.

But, first, I want to insert in the RECORD the Democratic substitute bill, and I want to say here one word about it. That bill has been criticised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED]; it has been criticised by some others because it did not contain a provision preventing the accumulation of titles of land ownership by corporations. My heavens! Mr. Chairman, how could it? The very theory of the bill is to leave the people of the Philippines to pass their own laws for the regulation of their own land ownership. It contains no regulation as to franchises, either; we leave that question to the people of the islands. It contains no regulation as to banks; we leave them self-government there. It contains no regulation as to coinage; if they are capable of any sort of self-government at all, they must pass their own coinage laws.

Nor do we give away, or prepare to give away, their franchises. It would be contrary to the Democratic theory if we made the slightest preparation for that, because every vested interest which we plant in the Philippine Islands is one more strong voice enlisted in favor of their permanent retention—a vested interest pleading not to be left.

So all these criticisms sink at once by their own weight. If gentlemen have objection to our bill they must likewise have objection to what was done in the case of Cuba. I hold here the Army appropriation bill, and I shall insert in the RECORD, in parallel columns, just what the Democratic party made the Republican Administration do with regard to Cuba, and side by side with it what the Democratic party proposes to do in this minority substitute bill regarding the Philippine Islands.

OUR BILL.

A bill (H. R. 15158) to provide for the temporary government and the permanent independence of the Philippine Archipelago.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SECTION 1. That subject to the provisions hereinafter set forth the United States of America hereby relinquish all claim of sovereignty over and title to the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands.

SEC. 2. That the United States shall continue to occupy and govern said archipelago until the people thereof have established a government in accordance with the provisions of this act, with sufficient guaranties for the performance of our treaty obligations with Spain and for the safety of those inhabitants who have adhered to the United States, and for the maintenance and protection of all rights which have accrued under the authority thereof, as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. That upon the cessation of organized armed opposition to the temporary sovereignty of the United States Government the President of the United States shall proclaim the fact, and within ninety days after the issuance of such proclamation the United States Philippine Commission shall make and promulgate rules and regulations for the holding of an election in the various provinces of said Philippine Archipelago for members of a house of representatives and a senate, to constitute a temporary congress, which shall be vested with full legislative power and also with the power of appointing such judges as may to them seem proper and necessary. The said Philippine congress shall prescribe rules and regulations for the election or appointment of all other officers, provincial or municipal, as may to them seem proper or necessary. The members of the said senate and house shall hold their offices for the term of four years from and after their election and qualification, unless said terms of office are sooner terminated by the inauguration of the permanent government created by the constitutional convention hereinafter provided for, and all other officers shall hold office for such terms as may be prescribed by such congress. Senators and representatives in congress are to receive compensation at the rate of $800 per annum and other officers shall receive such compensation as may be prescribed by the congress.

EXECUTIVE.

The chief executive shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, and shall be vested with a veto power over all acts of the Philippine congress having relation to their foreign affairs, but shall have no veto power with respect to other legislation, nor shall he be empowered to appoint any officer unless authorized to do so by the Philippine congress. He shall exercise such other executive powers as shall be vested in him by the Philippine congress, and shall hold his office for a term of four years unless the temporary government shall within that time be superseded by the inauguration of the permanent government herein provided for, and said president shall receive a compensation of $10,000 per annum, to be paid out of

NOW NOTE.

THE LAW FOR CUBA.

That in fulfillment of the declaration contained in the joint resolution approved April 20, 1898, entitled, "For the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect," the President is hereby authorized to "leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people" so soon as a government shall have been established in said island under a constitution which, either as a part thereof or in an ordinance appended thereto shall define the future relations of the United States with Cuba, substantially as follows:

I.

That the government of Cuba shall never enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, nor in any manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain by colonization or for military or naval purposes or otherwise, lodgment in or control over any portion of said island.

II.

That said government shall not assume or contract any public debt, to pay the interest upon which, and to make reasonable sinking fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which, the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of government shall be inadequate.

III.

That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

IV.

That all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupancy thereof are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected.

V.

That the government of Cuba will execute, and as far as necessary extend, the plans already devised or other plans to be mutually agreed upon for the sanitation of the cities of the island, to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and commerce of Cuba, as well as to the commerce of the southern ports of the United States and the people residing therein.

VI.

That the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, the title thereto being left to future adjustment by treaty.

VII.

That to enable the United States to maintain the independence of the Philippine treasury. There shall be such other executive officers receiving such compensation and performing such duties as may be prescribed by the Philippine congress, and they shall be appointed or elected in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

During the period of the existence of the temporary government herein provided for, which shall in no event extend beyond four years from and after the date of its inauguration, the United States guarantee to the people of said Philippine Archipelago their independence and a republican form of government, and shall protect them against invasion and, upon application by the congress thereof, against domestic violence.

That all male inhabitants of said archipelago 21 years of age and over who can speak and write either the English or Spanish language, or any of the native languages of the said archipelago, and who shall have resided therein for one year, shall be qualified to vote for members of congress and other elective officers, and any person so qualified as an elector shall be qualified to become a member of said congress or to hold any elective office.

The house of representatives shall be composed of 100 members and the senate of 30 members, and shall be apportioned by the United States Philippine Commission among the several provinces of said archipelago, so that the distribution of membership in the house of representatives shall be in proportion to their population, as near as may be, and so that the membership of the senate shall be as nearly representative of separate provinces as may be; and when said apportionment has been determined upon, the said Commission shall by proclamation order an election of the members of said congress to be held throughout the said archipelago, at such time as shall be fixed by the said Commission, which election shall be held not more than one hundred and twenty days from the date of the proclamation by the President of the United States hereinbefore provided for, and ample time shall be given before said election to circulate said proclamation throughout the archipelago and arrange for the holding of said election.

SEC. 4. That the members of the congress thus elected shall meet at the city of Manila on a day to be fixed by the United States Philippine Commission, not more than ninety days subsequent to the day of election, the time for which meeting shall be stated in the proclamation aforesaid, and, after organization, the said congress and president, constituting the temporary government herein provided for, shall proceed to the performance of their duties as the temporary government of the Philippine Archipelago: Provided, That said congress shall provide by legislation and treaty, irrevocable without the consent of the United States—

First. That there shall belong to the United States, and continue to be the property thereof, such lands and waters as the President of the United States shall designate to the Philippine government, and shall be agreed to by it, for naval, military, and coaling stations, and terminal facilities for submarine cables, the same to continue under the control and sovereignty of the United States.

Second. To carry into effect the treaty obligations of the United States with the Kingdom of Spain and for the maintenance and protection of all rights and property acquired under the authority of the United States.

Third. That no inhabitant of said archipelago shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her adherence to the United States.

SEC. 5. That when the election herein provided for shall have taken place and the congress thereby elected shall have convened, in compliance with the provisions of this act, the said United States Philippine Commission shall certify the fact to the President of the United States, whereupon it shall be the duty of President to issue his proclamation declaring the independence of the people of said archipelago and that they constitute an independent state and nation; subject, however, to the control and regulation of the United States in their intercourse with foreign nations during the period of the existence of the temporary government herein provided for.

SEC. 6. That immediately after the President shall have proclaimed that all organized armed resistance to the United States has ceased in said archipelago, he is requested to proclaim full amnesty to all inhabitants thereof for and on account of political offenses and the bearing of arms against the United States, and all Filipinos or inhabitants of said archipelago who have been deported shall be returned to the place whence they were so deported: Provided, That such amnesty shall not apply to any who have violated the rules of civilized warfare or who have been guilty of murder or torture; that the latter, if any, shall be afforded a speedy trial for their offenses in the civil courts of said archipelago and be punished or acquitted, as the facts and law may warrant.

SEC. 7. That within sixty days from the election of officers under the temporary government to be formed by the people of the Philippine Archipelago, in accordance with the provisions of this act, and the inauguration of said officers, the President shall order the armed forces of the United States to be withdrawn from said archipelago as speedily as may be, except such forces as may be maintained in such parts thereof as have been retained by the United States for naval and coaling stations and terminal facilities for cables, and the President of the United States and the Secretary of War shall make all needful regulations to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of the Philippine congress herein provided for to prescribe rules and regulations and qualifications for electors for the election and holding of a constitutional convention, which shall be charged with the duty of framing a permanent government for the people of the Philippine Archipelago. Said constitutional convention shall be called to meet at such place and at such time, not later than the first Monday of January, 1905, as may be prescribed by said Philippine congress. Upon the completion of the labors of said convention and the inauguration of the permanent government consequent thereon, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation declaring the absolute and unqualified independence of the people of the Philippine Archipelago and that they constitute an independent state and nation, and upon the issuance of said proclamation the United States Government and the Philippine government shall become and be as fully separate and independent as any other separate and independent nations are: Provided, however, That if the Philippine government requests it, the United States Government hereby agrees to assume a protectorate over the Philippine Archipelago for a period additional to the period of the temporary government herein provided for, said additional period of protectorate not to exceed, however, the period of sixteen years: Provided further, That the said Philippine government agree, during the said period of additional protectorate, to surrender to the keeping of the United States Government the regulation and control of the foreign affairs of the Philippine Archipelago.

SEC. 9. That all terms of office of legislative, executive, and judicial officers of the temporary government hereinbefore provided for, including the term of office of the president and the terms of office of the senators and representatives in congress hereinbefore prescribed, shall terminate with the existence of the temporary government herein provided for, and said temporary government shall ipso facto cease to exist upon the inauguration of the permanent government to be called into existence by the constitutional convention herein provided for; and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the congress of the Philippine Archipelago from calling the said constitutional convention at a date earlier than the date herein fixed.

Cuba, and to protect the people thereof, as well as for its own defense, the government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States lands necessary for coaling or naval stations at certain specified points, to be agreed upon with the President of the United States.

VIII.

That by way of further assurance the government of Cuba will embody the foregoing provisions in a permanent treaty with the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I come now to the speeches that have been made—to remove some of the rubbish off our lot, so that we may build. First there came the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], and he said that "the Philippine question should not be a party question." Of course it ought not to be a party question. It is a question which most vitally concerns American citizenship in this country, regardless of parties. It has, however, become a party question, and it is a party question. Who made it a party question? You upon the Republican side of this House. You made it a party question when you repudiated the policy and the ideals of the Hispano-American war. [Applause.]

The gentleman says that the Democratic party was responsible for the war as much as the Republican party. This is one of those half truths which is the most dangerous falsehood. Let me carry you back a moment to what really took place. The Democratic party strove in season and out of season to get a declaration of the belligerent rights and a recognition of independence of the Cuban Republic. Upon that last great day of that great War Congress the Democratic party brought into this House—unanimously recommended by the minority members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and unanimously voted for by every Democrat upon the floor—a simple resolution recognizing the independence of the Republic of Cuba. Then, when that was voted down, then it was, and then only, that a great and overwhelming majority of the Democrats voted with you in favor of a resolution of intervention, which they knew meant war.

I believed, and do to this day believe, that had we recognized the independence of Cuba as we on this side wanted to do, Cuba would have been more independent to-day than she is now, because she would have been without the Platt amendment, and she would have been as free and as happy, while there would have been no war. I urged it, as did the Democratic leader at that time, Mr. BAILEY, of Texas, as the only way to prevent war. Cuba would have gained her freedom as Texas gained hers, through the instrumentality of Americans, but not of the American Government—American volunteers going to the shores of Cuba and helping to establish another republic upon the surface of this earth.

Had they gone there they would to such an extent have assimilated with the population, to such an extent infiltrated American ideas, that Cuba would have been knocking at the doors of this Republic within a few years after she had gained independence, asking for admission as a new State in the galaxy. Remember, it was only after that resolution was voted down that we then voted for the resolution of intervention, and why did we do it? Because we thought it was wiser, more patriotic, for Americans to present a solid front to the common enemy of America and of mankind—Spain—if war was coming; if war had to come, to let it come upon a people without party division. That has been our idea ever since; and at no time have we refused to vote supplies for the war, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] charged.

He cited a case where we refused to vote $500,000, for what? The erection of "permanent barracks in the Philippine Islands." It is true that in its first phase, when worded as above, it went out on a point of order and had to come back to escape the point of order, cloaked under the language, "shelter for the American troops," but every man in this body not a fool knew what the money was going to be used for, and not desiring to retain the Philippine Islands permanently, we did not desire to vote to expend the money of the people for permanent constructions and erections there.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; no. I have very little time to answer several Republican speeches, and the gentleman will remember that it is the first time that I have refused to yield. If I have a little time at the end, I will yield to him. Ah, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen strangely forget the facts in the recent past. The gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. COOPER, who made this argument, was, I well remember, the very chief and front of the "blanket Indians" and the "insurrectionists" upon that side of the House upon the Cuban independence question.

There are a thousand reasons—geographical, military, naval, commercial, international—for our "gobbling up" Cuba for one that exists for "gobbling up" the Philippines, and yet that gentleman headed the insurrectionists on that side in favor of Cuban independence, and later on, well do I remember, that he stood shoulder to shoulder with me and with others in advocating the Foraker resolution, which said that the people of Cuba "are and of right ought to be free and independent," and the Teller resolution which said that we were not going to carry on the war for conquest nor for territorial aggrandizement, but for humanity, and all that. It was by Democratic votes in the Senate, followed by their colleagues here, that those two resolutions were pinned upon the intervention resolutions and were made the policy of the country. It was no secret that the Republican Administration was opposed to both of them. The Senator who introduced the resolution to the effect that "the Cuban people are and of right ought to be free and independent" was regarded as unfriendly to the Administration at the time for doing it. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] stood with us upon that and he stood well, too. He stood right, and then after that——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think the gentleman is wrong in his statement of the history of events. The Senator from Ohio did not introduce the resolution that the gentleman from Mississippi has spoken of. His resolution was a resolution of recognition to the Cuban government—the so-called Cuban government.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, it is the same thing. It does not disturb the line of my argument. The gentleman from Wisconsin was in favor of it. He was in favor of the recognition of the independence of the Cuban people, just as I was, and then some time after that the gentleman went back into his tent, sulked like Achilles—went back into his cell—and he was supposed to be persona non grata over on that side of the Chamber.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman is in error in saying that I ever voted to recognize the Cuban Republic. I never cast such a vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; you were never called on to cast a yea-and-nay vote on it, but does the gentleman deny that he was in the caucus of Republicans who insisted upon that course of conduct, and that he was one of the men who advocated it?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not. I never attended any caucus of Republicans. I never attended any caucus of Democrats——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I never attended a caucus of Republicans which resolved in any way, shape, or manner to recognize or demand a recognition of the Cuban Republic.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman say he never advocated the independence of Cuba?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I said that I thought at that time that it would end the war, end the trouble, if we should recognize the Cuban Republic.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Ah, so did I, and there we were together; that is substantially what I asserted, and I still think we were right.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But one moment. A committee from that caucus went to the White House and consulted with President McKinley, and he, in confidence, gave us the status of affairs and the policy of the Administration, and thereafter no member of that committee, no member of that caucus, ever voted otherwise than in support of the Administration of William McKinley.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that that explanation cuts much figure. The fact is that the gentleman was in favor of the independence of Cuba, and that he now stands against the independence of the Philippines. The fact is that he was in favor of the resolutions making the war a war "not for territorial aggrandizement, nor for conquest," and that he now stands with the solid phalanx of his party on the other side for a war of conquest and territorial aggrandizement. The fact is that when the Speaker of this House came to appoint a Committee on Insular Affairs he appointed the gentleman to the great honor of being chairman of that committee, and, then, to paraphrase the words of Robert Burns, he appointed on the committee all the chairmen of all the other great committees of this Republican House "to hold the wretch in order."

And now the gentleman stands here, chief of the imperialists, with a bill called by his name, fixing no period at which our rule in the Philippine Islands shall cease, a bill which is as purely a crown colony measure as any ever emanating from the British Parliament at any time.

The gentleman was in his tent for a while, and it was generally bruited about—generally thought at any rate, rumored or dreamed—that his life was becoming "drearier and drearier" with his party associates, until after a while he was "all right," as so many of you gentlemen do become "all right" in the course of time. I do wish we had on this side the capacity for final cohesion that you gentlemen over there have. We might not be as strong a party as regards our individualistic ideas, nor as nearly right always on fundamental principles and policies, but we would be much stronger about getting into power and staying there after we got in.

I picked up the other day a piece of doggerel which the House will excuse me for paraphrasing and reciting, because it reminds me of the position of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] with regard to this question:

There was an old man in Siberia,
Whose life grew drearier and drearier,
Till he broke from his cell, with a h—— of a yell,
And eloped with the Hag Imperial.

Catherine II, I reckon. [Great laughter.]

Life was becoming "drearier and drearier" with you gentlemen on the other side until you began one by one to "break from your cells" and "elope with the Hag Imperial." Imperialism is, like every other vice—

Of so frightful a mien,
As to be hated needs but to be seen;
Yet seen too oft, familiar with its face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

And the men who embrace it become, sometimes, the greatest lovers of it, by the ordinary process of love feeding on embraces.

The gentleman says that the Democratic party was responsible, conjointly with some gentlemen on that side, for the war. As I said a moment ago, that is a half truth. But what war? A war which bore upon its shield, emblazoned in everlasting colors, the declaration that it was a war "not for territorial aggrandizement, nor for conquest," which, in the words of a great man, whose corpse has been horribly exploited for partisan purposes in this debate, would be, "in our code of ethics," "criminal aggression."

When the time came we took our part in that war; and our brothers and our sons took their part in it, too. But we are in no manner responsible for this Philippine war, which is a totally different thing.

The gentleman says we became responsible when we ratified the treaty. The gentleman treats the act of three or four Democrats who voted against the Bacon amendment to that treaty as a crime chargeable to the party. But the world knows that the ratification of that treaty unamended was a Republican ratification, and that it was against the sense and contention of the Democratic party in both Houses. Every Democrat in the Senate, except three, voted for the Bacon amendment.

Mr. HAMILTON. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will have to yield to the gentleman, but after this I must not yield to anybody, because, as the gentlemen here understand, I have the closing speech and the time can not be extended.

Mr. HAMILTON. I want to ask the gentleman——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield to the gentleman because he has been so uniformly courteous in yielding to me that I can not refuse.

Mr. HAMILTON. Did it not require a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present to ratify that treaty?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON. And was not the Senate then controlled by Democrats, Populists, and free-silver Republicans?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not remember as to that.

Mr. HAMILTON. They stood 46 to 44.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not remember about that, but go ahead with your question.

Mr. HAMILTON. I have nothing further to ask the gentleman. I merely wanted to remind him of the facts of the case, because he said there were only three or four Democratic votes in the Senate in favor of ratifying the treaty.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. My recollection is that there were exactly three Democrats who wanted to ratify that treaty unamended. There may have been one more or one less. And that is all there is in that. The Bacon amendment was the test vote on that question.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman indulged in a good deal of fun at the expense of the Constitution—"the palladium of our liberties!" as he called it. Well, the Constitution may be a very funny thing to him and to some other gentlemen on the other side. It may be a thing whose fragments, when you stumble about among them, are amusing. But there are some of us who believe in a personal God; and there are a few of us left to whom it is not funny to jest at a thing which we have sworn "without mental reservation" to support on becoming members of this body, and than which there neither is nor can be for us as Representatives any higher law.

Why, sir, the whole argument is based upon this sort of an idea, that if a man hears the cry of "Wolf, wolf, wolf," several times and there is no wolf he ought to believe in the nonexistence of wolves. And if he hears five or six false alarms of fire when there is no fire, he ought to lie in bed like a fool and be consumed by the flames when a fire has at last come. [Applause.]

There has never been a republic which existed and afterwards died, that did not die by the insidious and slow process of undiscovered sapping. And at the time of the undiscovered sapping and insidious new departures, the nature of which was realized by very few, there were men who gave the cry of alarm, but as there had been many men before who had given cries of alarm and the republic had apparently continued to exist, this very fact was used to blind and deceive the people when faced with a real crisis. Notwithstanding that, there may be cause for alarm, and if there is cause for alarm, the fact that the people have thought there was such cause in the past at a time when there was not, is a schoolboy argument against the duty to take heed. Now, I say that there is cause for alarm when, for the first time in the history of the Republic, a majority of us contend that we have the right to carry on a form of government on one part of God's earth "outside of" the Constitution of the United States, while we still admit for a time—how long, who can tell—that we must carry it on in this part of the earth within the Constitution of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin then made this argument, that because Mr. McKinley was a good man, a courteous, patriotic, brave, and pious man, and had been cruelly and wantonly murdered, and because he had advocated this policy, therefore it must be sacred, and no other man ought to oppose it. And then, after he was through exploiting the poor corpse of the assassinated, cruelly murdered, exquisitely courteous gentleman, who happened to be President of the United States at the time this policy was first inaugurated, he then dug up Grant, and he dug up Sherman, I believe, and several others, to show that they in their time had been denounced, and therefore, forsooth, we should not denounce wrong things in our time. In other words, it is a sufficient answer, when you say a thing is wrong, to say some other fellow in the last generation said something else was wrong and in your opinion it was not. When you say a thing is tyranny, it is a sufficient answer to say that somebody else said something was tyranny in another generation, and the time has past and now we find out that perhaps it was not.

I shall not enter upon the question in connection with General Grant, but there are many people in this country yet, I among them, who believe that if General Grant had been nominated and elected for a third term as President of this country, there would have been nothing in the way of his being President for a fourth, a fifth, and a sixth term, or until he died, and the precedent once broken down, there would have been nothing in the way of the Mexicanization of American institutions.

But what has all that got to do with this question?

Then the gentleman says, when he refers to these atrocities out in the Philippine Islands, that they are "isolated instances of cruelty." Mr. Chairman, are they isolated instances? Now, if the gentleman means by that that nine-tenths of the American soldiers and nine-tenths of the American officers are absolutely as guiltless of these atrocities as I am, standing here, then the gentleman is perfectly right. I thank God that there are very few men indeed who could find it in their hearts to pen a H. R. J. Smith-Samar order, or find it in their hearts to justify it after it had been penned. If that order were not wrong, why was it that the President of the United States, when he heard of its issuance, ordered a court-martial to consider the question?

Is it right or wrong to issue an order to "burn and kill—the more you burn and kill the better"—and to murder children? If wrong and hellish, why defend it, even by inuendo? But has the gentleman a right to call them isolated instances in another sense? What he really meant by that was that they were not the policy of the Administration. But the truth is that the Smith order was issued with the knowledge of the powers that were representing us in the military half of the Philippine government, and that the Smith order was known to the War Department here, and that no attempt was ever made to punish or to investigate the man that issued it, until after the public attention was called to it and the Administration and War Department attacked because of it. The fact is that notwithstanding the President's late speech at Arlington, in which he said those who were guilty of wrongdoing should be hunted out and punished, Smith has been acquitted, and I see by an article in the Washington Post, which I have not time to read you, that he is to be promoted to the command of the Department of Texas. I insert it in my remarks:

ORDER TO GENERAL SMITH—WILL BE PUT IN COMMAND OF DEPARTMENT OF TEXAS—COURSE IN SAMAR WAS UPHELD—THE PRESIDENT, AFTER HIS REVIEW OF THE CASE, MAY DISAPPROVE THE FINDINGS, BUT CAN NOT NOW IMPOSE ANY PUNISHMENT BEYOND CRITICISM—ADMISSIONS BY THE ACCUSED AT THE TRIAL.

Announcement was made at the War Department yesterday that Brig. Gen. Jacob H. Smith will be immediately ordered to proceed to San Francisco, and will then be placed in command of the military department of Texas. This action of the Department dispels any doubt that may have existed as to the findings of the court which tried General Smith for his conduct of the campaign in Samar. He has been acquitted, and, so far as the court is concerned, there will be no further proceedings against him. It now remains for the President to review the case, and he is expected to make public his views in the course of ten days. He may disapprove the findings of the court and strongly condemn General Smith's work in Samar, but there can now be no punishment save in the way of criticism.

The record, which the President has received, contains the exact language of the admissions made by Colonel Woodruff, counsel for General Smith, in regard to the orders which the latter officer issued to Major Waller,

United States Marines. The charge was "Conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline," and it was supported by this specification:

"In that Brig. Gen. Jacob H. Smith, U. S. A., commanding general of the Sixth Separate Brigade, Division of the Philippines, did give instructions in regard to the conduct of hostilities in the island of Samar, P. I., to his subordinate officer, Maj. L. W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps, the said Major Waller being under his command and commanding at the time a subterritorial district in the island of Samar, P. I., in language and words, to wit:

"'I want no prisoners' (meaning thereby that giving of quarter was not desired or required), and 'I wish you to kill and burn. The more you kill and burn the better you will please me,' and 'the interior of Samar must be made a howling wilderness,' and did give further instructions to said Major Waller that he (General Smith) wanted all persons killed who were capable of bearing arms, and did, in reply to a question by the said Major Waller asking for an age limit, designate the age limit at 10 years.

"This at or near the island of Samar, Philippine Islands, between the 23d and 28th of October, 1901."

SMITH'S PLEA AND ADMISSIONS.

The record then gives General Smith's plea to the charge and specifications, which was "not guilty." Colonel Woodruff's statement, which was partially cabled at the time it was made, is then given in full, as follows:

"The accused desires to simplify this case as much as possible, and admits that he was commanding general of the Sixth Separate Brigade, Division of the Philippines; that Major Waller was one of his subordinate officers, commanding a subterritorial district, and that he did give him personal instructions relating to hostiles under arms in the field, and he did instruct him not to burden himself with prisoners, of which General Smith already had so many that the efficiency of his command was impaired, and tell him that he wanted him to kill and burn in the interior and hostile country; and did further instruct him that the interior of Samar must be made a howling wilderness; and did further instruct him that he wanted all persons killed who were capable of bearing arms and were actively engaged in hostilities; and that he did designate the age limit at 10 years, as boys of that age were actively engaged in hostilities against the United States authorities, and were equally dangerous as an enemy as those of more mature age."

The record then shows that the judge-advocate asked the question:

"Does the accused admit that as his statement?"

"I do," was the response of General Smith.

From the same paper I learn that even the postmaster editors have learned that General Smith is sacred:

Those postmaster editors who started out to be indignant over the acts of Gen. Jake H. R. Smith have changed their minds. They really thought at first that the War Department meant what it said and was going to do something unpleasant to Smith and the promoters of that mode of warfare.

The gentleman from Wisconsin said, "If there were American embezzlers in Cuba, would you therefore charge the American administration with a policy of embezzlement?" No. Why not? Because it sought to punish and did punish the embezzlers. That is why. But if they had been justified and defended in their embezzlement, and promoted for it, then it would have been guilty of a policy of embezzlement. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Now, understand me, gentlemen. I say and I admit that if you are going to persevere in this policy out yonder, things like Smith's order are necessary in order effectually to carry out your policy. I am not even condemning Smith, except in the sense that I do not think the right sort of a man would be the tool for the carrying out of that sort of a policy under the flag of this or any other country. But it is the policy which is so hellish that it can not be made more hellish by any possible hellish atrocities committed in its name.

One of the things that the gentleman from Wisconsin did best was to read a beautiful poem, the author of which was Rizal, a Philippine patriot and genius—a poet, by the way, whose works if read in the Philippine Islands to-day in a public place would cause the reader to be charged with violation of the sedition laws; a poem describing amongst other things the beauties of the Philippine Islands, as well as the aspirations of its people for better institutions and freer government. I wonder if the gentleman thought of our disgraceful Philippine sedition law or of the present desolated condition of "the fair isle of Samar"—its torture-racked people and murdered boys—while reading it? At the conclusion the gentleman told us that Rizal was finally convicted upon "false testimony wrung from witnesses by torture." And yet the gentleman has not had one word of condemnation for the use of torture for the purpose of obtaining confessions—mind you, not for the purpose of military retaliation or in hot blood, but in cool, deliberate moments, as a part of court procedure, for the purpose of obtaining testimony—which is going on now every day in the Philippine Islands.

I shall insert in the RECORD in this connection an article from the Manila Freedom of April 22, 1902, upon that subject, an Administration and expansion paper. The object of the article is to defend the use of the torture. It is not an attack made upon the Administration, and it admits and establishes, while it is going along, the existence of all this thing. It expressly says that it has been used, not sporadically but generally, and that it has been used, not in retaliation, but for the purpose of obtaining confessions, and it defends it upon the ground of the "necessity" of using it because the people are treacherous; defends it upon the ground of "provocation," advising officers to make a "clean breast" of it all and throw themselves on the country for justification.

[From the Manila Freedom, Tuesday, April 22, 1902.]

THE USE OF TORTURE.

Public feeling at home regarding the rumors of tortures inflicted on Filipinos by American officers and soldiers is described by press dispatches to be at the boiling point. General Smith, Major Glenn, and a score of other officers are to be tried by court-martial in case grounds are found, and the matter is to be cleaned up. This is the inevitable result of warfare. Mankind is human, and in the heat of a desperate contest are liable to go to extremes. The provocation is at times enormous, and the individuals can usually justify their acts to their own consciences. They are, however, liable to forget that the time is surely coming when they will be compelled to justify their acts to their compatriots at home, who are not viewing the matter from the passionate viewpoint engendered by warfare, but from the viewpoint of the fellow at home, who has not seen his comrades murdered and tortured, and who, therefore, can not justify retaliation.

As a matter of fact, there has been extensive employment in these islands of the "water cure" and of various other measures for the extortion of confessions. There is not the slightest use of denying the fact. There are a thousand witnesses ready to testify to it in case it becomes compulsory or necessary. In a great many cases no permanent harm has been done by the employment of these measures, but, on the contrary, information has been gained which has been of the greatest service in bringing about peace. The enemy has been treacherous in the extreme, and sometimes the safety and the very lives of the garrisons have depended upon knowing the truth. As a measure of self-protection the truth has been extorted even by the employment of the most extreme measures.

The evil of the employment of these measures had been in the irresponsibility of many who have applied them. Many baby lieutenants, who should have been back under the corrective influence of their parents, have had the lives of many people in their hands, and if one happened to be vindictive or naturally cruel the evil which resulted has been great. The innocent have suffered in many cases. The most revolting cases are, sad to say, more than rumors.

At the end of all wars there comes a time of recrimination. It came at the end of the Spanish-American war; it came at the end of the rebellion, and it has come at the end of every war known to creation. The excesses committed in the heat of the strife have been expatiated in the after-cooling of public sentiment. This is one of the penalties of the military profession.

A few officers will undoubtedly be cashiered, more will be reprimanded, the matter will be the sensation of the day, and then it will be forgotten. The Army will writhe under the lash, but the time for healing will not be far off.

It is deplorable that the water cure and many worse tortures have been employed by the American forces in the Philippine insurrection, but the fact remains that they have been employed. There is only one thing to do. Stand up like men and show the provocation and the necessity for retaliatory measures of the sort. There is no use for the generals in the States to deny that the reports are true. There is no use to attempt to gloss over the facts. They have been buried at the bottom, but in the course of time they have risen near to the top. They will eventually proclaim the truth to the world, and it is better to meet the issue like men than evade it and finally have the truth arise and confront us.

In admitting the fact that these measures have been employed the fact must not be lost sight of that they were never officially permitted, and that there is really no one responsible except the individuals who employed them. The fact must be also recognized that while there were many officers who used them and openly bragged of them, there was an overwhelming majority of the officers of the United States Army who never for a moment countenanced this sort of thing, and who conducted warfare in their districts like gentlemen, like Americans, and like Christians.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, what people are there on the face of the globe that would not be treacherous when beaten down to the ground with no possibility of fighting in the open and were yet not willing to submit to an alien rule? Why did nobody ever condemn the Spaniards as treacherous and bushwhackers because they killed every French soldier caught outside of the lines when Napoleon was trying to rob them of national independence and their freedom? On the contrary, the world has praised them for fighting as best they could with what weapons were left them. Are we to judge these men by a different rule? And yet when General Smith was tried in the Philippine Islands the other day the court turned itself into counsel for the defense and ruled that proof of the treachery and general bad character of the inhabitants of Samar was relevant to the question as to whether General Smith was guilty or innocent!

Read the account. Remember it is not from an enemy, but from a friend of your policy of colonialism. The editor seems rather to rejoice that the court was making of itself both counsel for the prisoner and an avowed vehicle to "influence public opinion at home." Read:

COLONEL WOODRUFF'S STAND.

Colonel Woodruff, the Chauncey Depew of the Philippines, is working overtime now. As senior counsel for defense of General Smith he is called on to electrify the community at least once per diem, and whenever there is a home-going regiment to receive a send-off or a national fiesta to be celebrated, he has to scintillate until the small hours.

In opening the defense of General Smith yesterday, Colonel Woodruff declared his intentions for the conduct of the case in no uncertain language. That he believes the American people, or at least a fraction of them, to be laboring under a terrible misapprehension there is no room for doubt. That misapprehension he proposes to correct, appealing through the court-martial and through the press reports of its proceedings to the American people. The lengthy evidence that he proposes to submit, he urbanely informed the court, was not simply to aid the court in coming to a conclusion, but that the American people might listen to the truth as regards the army in the Philippines, and lay a broad, firm basis for judgment on the large questions now in sight.

In this undertaking the court seemed to give Colonel Woodruff sympathetic support. This was shown almost immediately. There was something almost correctional in the manner in which the court answered the judge advocate's objection that the details of the atrocities perpetrated on the bodies of our soldier dead at Balangiga were not germane to the defense as affording excuse for the drastic orders of General Smith. General Wheaton not only declared that the objection was not sustained, but added, with a Jovine frown, that the question would be answered, and that in future such questions, showing the character of the Samar natives, would be admitted to the court. Indeed, it is hardly likely that an army tribunal composed largely of general officers, some of whom have themselves come under criticism for "Weylerism," water cure, and other practices, would place many obstacles in the way of an officer who declared his intention of undertaking the self-imposed task of removing the stigma of cruelty and oppression, which for "some occult reason," as Colonel Woodruff declares, has been placed upon the army serving in the archipelago.

There appears to be absolutely no point of fact at issue between the prosecution and the defense in the General Smith case. The latter has admitted everything that the former hope to and more than it probably could prove. There is only one thing which it appears to be trying to establish, and that is the moral and military necessity of suasion by the sword and such means other than this as appear expedient to the end in view. It is not speculating too much to hazard a guess that this necessity is already established in the minds of the majority of the court. The American people, through President Roosevelt, have called this court because they conceived that a gigantic wrong was being enacted here, and they have demanded that the truth and the whole truth should out.

The defense appears to be determined to thrash out the whole matter, lay it before the American people, and abide by the consequences, whatever they may be.

Then there came upon the stage my friend from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON], and he told us that 35 provinces were "organized out there" and that "order reigned." Gentlemen, do you remember the time when the celebrated message was sent, "Order reigns in Warsaw?" Why, the attempt to make Samar a howling wilderness was so successful that it overleaped itself, and there was nothing left in Samar to howl. There was "order" in Samar. There is "order" there now. But as to the feeling of the people. and the idea that any real pacification has taken place, I shall insert in the RECORD a report from the Manila dispatches of the testimony of ex-insurgent Malvar, which you have all read, and an editorial from the Washington Post, proving that there has been no pacification, except the pacification which a helpless people apparently show when they are cowed and afraid and awaiting a better opportunity to strike:

"Considerable surprise," the Manila dispatches say, was caused yesterday by the testimony of the ex-insurgent leader Malvar. He was called as a witness for Major Gardener respecting conditions in the province of Tayabas, and revealed to the astonished Americans that all their municipal governments there were really in sympathy with the insurrection. Every municipal officer, said General Malvar, who was drawing pay under American rule, really took orders from this insurgent commander, and constantly furnished him with supplies. He went on to say that there was not one native in any of those towns truly friendly to the Americans. This is telling evidence, not only for the accuracy of Major Gardener's description of the state of affairs, but also for the continued existence of a pervasive and settled aversion to our rule throughout the islands. This is the element of the problem which should appall our imperialists. A disaffected population of 10,000,000 we can not hold in perpetual and sullen subjugation. There is no American way of governing people who obstinately and year after year, defeated and disarmed but not dismayed, go on insisting that they are determined to govern themselves. If we are bent on subduing the Filipinos, our task is scarcely begun. We have yet to break the unconquerable will and turn obdurate hate to friendship; and we have neither the weapons nor the resources to accomplish that.

MALVAR ON FILIPINO INSURGENT METHODS.

Maj. Cornelius Gardener called the former insurgent general Malvar, who surrendered in Batangas Province last April, to testify at Manila yesterday before the board which is investigating the charges brought by Major Gardener concerning conditions in Tayabas Province, Luzon.

Malvar said that Tayabas Province had been one of the best disciplined insurgent strongholds under his control, and that each municipality in the province obeyed him. He said that he could have called out 1,500 riflemen and 450 bolomen in Tayabas Province without counting upon the men he could have raised in other provinces; that the people in the towns of Tayabas obeyed well the orders issued by the American authorities, as well as his own. They sent supplies to the insurgents, he said, and then after the lapse of a few days would notify the Americans that such supplies had gone out.

This Malvar ordered the townspeople to do in order that they might not be suspected by the Americans of disloyalty. Each body of insurgents in Tayabas was supported by the town to which it belonged. General Malvar said also that the object of all his orders was to prolong the struggle indefinitely; consequently, in small engagements the insurgents were only allowed to attack the Americans when they outnumbered them three to one, and in larger engagements only when they had at least equal numbers. Malvar said that the presence in any town of one native who was truly friendly to the American cause would have made it impossible for an insurgent body to exist in that town. To the best of his belief the insurgents had candidates in all municipal elections held in the province. In conclusion, he said that the insurrection in Tayabas and Batangas provinces had been broken up as a result of the reconcentration methods adopted by Gen. J. Franklin Bell.

The gentleman said, "Only a tribe or two oppose us." But it happens that the tribes who oppose us constitute 6,500,000 of these people—Tagalogs and Visayas and all the Christian Filipinos. The testimony of General Chaffee is (and General Chaffee insinuates a justification for some of these things which are going on out there based upon this statement of facts) that every one of them is an enemy, and that when they call themselves friends they are merely acting treacherously; and my private opinion is that they are enemies.

Suppose during the Revolutionary war our people had got to the place where they could not fight any other way. Do you not think they would, as Marion and Sumter and their followers did, have taken to the swamps, or taken to the mountains, and that they would have bushwhacked where they could, and that some of them would have come in perhaps and taken the oath of allegiance to the British Crown, and then, finding tyranny no longer tolerable and oppression longer unendurable, gone back to their duty of fighting Britons, as Isaac Hayne of South Carolina, one of her greatest and purest patriots did, being afterwards shot on the charge of violating his oath of allegiance to the British Crown?

Human nature is the same all over the world, and when men are helpless and cowed by their helplessness, they always seek safety in cunning and deceit, trying to do what they can secretly and treacherously, if need be, for their cause. We should not be too hard upon these people about that.

Then, gentlemen say that these people are incapable of self-government. Now, gentlemen, I want to call your attention to this: If these people are incapable of self-government, then the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] must be mistaken about some things he told us the other day, because he described these people as "pleasant people," "nice gentlemen," "nice ladies," and he said that they had "20,000 children at school in Manila alone." What a significant fact! the parents of 20,000 children in one town so thirsty for knowledge for their offspring as voluntarily to send them to school, even when conducted by hated Americans! And General Smith of Samar-order fame must be mistaken, because it is the testimony of General Smith that 10-year-old boys out there are fighting and are willing to die for the independence and liberty of their country; and when the battle of Manila took place women were in the ranks of the Philippine army, some of them armed only with bows and arrows, fighting side by side with their husbands and brothers.

Now, you need not tell me that any people do not deserve liberty and are not capable of self-government; not, of course, our sort ro self-government, but their sort, a government suitable and propef for them: who have these two qualities which are demonstated by what I have mentioned in this case: First, that they are willing to learn; and second, that they are willing to die. [Applause.] If these are not tests to demonstrate that a people ought to be intrusted with the experiment of self-government, then I do not know what could be.

The gentleman went on afterwards to say that "we can not galvanize the sixteenth century upon the twentieth." Of course we can not, and that is the very reason why I do not want to keep the Philippine Islands. [Applause.] It is you who are trying to galvanize the sixteenth century to the twentieth by adding the Filipinos as a part of the body politic of the American people in the twentieth century. I want no sixteenth century population-development attached to the population of the United States to drag us down to equal citizenship, or else to drag us down still further, if we rule them as a subject people, by tempting us by their weakness and our consciousness of power to deeds of tyranny, brutality, and oppression.

I do not say that these people are capable of the same measure of self-government as we are. Of course they are not. I do not know that republican institutions would be the proper government for them. I am rather inclined to believe that they would not be. I am inclined to believe that down in Mexico even, where the people are somewhat more highly developed than they are in the Philippines, the Mexican Diaz dictatorship is for the present the best form of government. It is the training school, the preparatory school through which the people go. And, for that very reason, this Democratic bill, which we offer as a substitute, after it makes provision for a temporary government for four years, which shall act as a bridge between the American sovereignty and the Philippine self-government, and which, being inaugurated under our auspices and bearing our impress, is given a republican form, leaves these people, after that, free to adopt any sort of government they choose. It may be that a government by the notables of the provinces would be the best for them. I am not discussing that.

But you are awfully mistaken if you forget that the right of self-government carries with it the right of self-misgovernment for the individual and for the nation as it needs must, and that in both cases the exercise of the right has exactly the same limit. The gentleman fromPennsylvania in front of me has a right to self-misgovernment up to this exact limit; that that self-misgovernment shall not go so far as to injure me or any of the balance of his neighbors. Every nation on the surface of this earth has, internationally speaking, the right of self-misgovernment, as an incident to self-government, up to this point, from my standpoint, that that self-misgovernment shall not take the shape of injuring any other nation of the earth in its rights.

Any other theory would keep individuals and nations always intermeddling with one another's affairs, and establish a moral censorship and tyranny of the strong over the weak.

What, for example, have we to do with the little miserable revolutions and scandals that take place in South America, as long as they do not touch us?

Ah, my friends, you stand in a peculiar attitude. I want to call your attention to two pictures for a moment. One of them is the picture of Cuba—free, happy, prosperous; the picture of the American flag which was "put" and which did not "stay put."

It did not "stay put" because wise prescience and foresight, which unfortunately could not foresee the Philippine imbroglio—or it would have provided for that too—provided that we should not hold Cuba as conquest or colony or territorial appendage, nor the people as "citizens appurtenant," to use again the absurd and senseless phrase that one of the judges of the Supreme Court has rendered popular in certain quarters.

Look upon that picture. Amid the huzzas and the vivas of the population; amidst the plaudits of the civilized world, an American general, with power enough to hold the country within the very grip of his hand, if we had so elected, ordered the American flag—the emblem of freedom and liberty, and of sympathy with peoples struggling for independence everywhere—to be lowered and another flag to go up as a witness of the birth of a new republic upon the surface of the earth, and as a witness perpetually of the magnanimity, the chivalry, the nobility, and the wisdom of the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side].

I shall read you an account of that inspiring scene from the pen of W. J. Bryan:

THE BIRTH OF THE CUBAN REPUBLIC.

[Article written by Mr. Bryan for Collier's Weekly, and reproduced by courtesy of that journal.]

"Viva Cuba Libre!" "Viva la Republica de Cuba!" These were the exclamations of delight and of patriotism with which the Cuban people greeted the 20th day of May, the day upon which the American Government of intervention formally transferred authority to the newly formed Cuban Government.

For days the city of Habana had been busy with preparations for the great event. Fifty thousand dollars had been contributed by the citizens and spent in decorations. Triumphal arches towered above the streets; large Cuban flags floated from the flagstaffs of the business blocks and little flags fluttered from bamboo poles; streamers covered the buildings and patriotic mottoes and pictures of dead heroes recalled the struggle of more than thirty years, so full of sacrifice and so replete with valor, just now culminating in a glorious victory. Everywhere were evidences of joy and exultation.

From the time the president-elect landed at the wharf of Habana the people were in a state of suppressed excitement, impatiently waiting the hour for which they had looked and longed. The most notable event of the week preceding the inauguration was the banquet tendered by the Cuban veterans to Governor-General Wood on Friday evening, May 16. Gen. Maximo Gomez, the greatest of Cuban generals, the hero of the war for independence, the idol of the Cuban patriots, and the trusted friend of the new president, sat at the head of the table, On his left was President-elect Tomas Estrada Palma and on his right Gen. Leonard A. Wood. At the same table sat the principal military and civil officials of Cuba, mingled with the officers of the United States Army. The banquet tables were made to form a shield and occupied the entire floor of the Tacon Theater, while the five galleries of that splendid auditorium were crowded with ladies in party dress. The banqueters below and the spectators above presented a combination of bravery and beauty ever to be remembered.

AN INSPIRING SCENE.

General Gomez, being a man of action rather than of words, called upon Senor Gonzalo de Quesada to act as toastmaster, and that the latter discharged his duty well was evident from the manner in which his introductions were greeted. Brief speeches were made by Senor Mario Garcia Kohly, General Fernando Freyre Andrade, and myself. Then Governor-General Wood was presented, and the entire audience arose and stood while he expressed in modest but felicitous language his appreciation of the courtesies shown him and his good wishes for the Cuban Republic. It was an inspiring scene, the like of which has been rare in the world's history—the representative of a great and powerful Government voluntarily surrendering into the hands of a comparatively small nation an authority that might have been withheld had the United States been actuated by the motives which control most nations that go to war. It was an act of magnanimity and of fidelity to principle that raised higher the flag about to be lowered. It was a moral victory more potent for good than any triumph of arms.

General Wood has had a difficult task, and while mistakes have been made and an occasional criticism is heard, these are outweighed by the positive good that has been done.

The Teller resolution, which was added to the resolution of intervention, contained the following words:

"That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people."

If any American citizen has regretted the making of that promise or has favored its violation, he would have been converted had he attended the banquet given by the veterans on Friday evening. He would have learned that love is better than homage, and that our nation enjoys a greater reward than it could possibly have secured by conquest or violence.

GENERAL WOOD'S FAREWELL RECEPTION.

On the Saturday night following the banquet General Wood gave a farewell reception in the same theater, with President Palma as the guest of honor. An immense crowd was in attendance. On the same evening the leading Spanish society of the city celebrated the coronation of Spain's young king by a grand ball in the Casino Español. Here, amid the waving of Spanish flags and the perfume of tropical flowers, the élite of the Spanish element met and drank the health of Alfonso XIII.

At midnight on the 19th the bells rang, the engines and boats whistled, cannons fired, and each person seemed to try to make more noise than his neighbor. From that time on for several days the city was given over to rejoicing and to the heartiest manifestations of delight. Firecrackers were exploded everywhere, and that, too, with a recklessness that would have done credit to the American small boy.

When the Spaniards evacuated Habana the beautiful statue of Queen Isabella, which stood in the center of the most prominent park, was taken down, but the pedestal was left standing. The Cubans, to signalize the change which had taken place in their government, secured a statue such as is used in the United States to represent the Goddess of Liberty and, on the forenoon of the 20th, this statue was placed upon the pedestal. The crowds that surged by it noted and commented on the transformation that had taken place in the ideas for which their government stood. At night a light was placed in the uplifted hand of the goddess, and the Western Hemisphere beheld a new "Liberty enlightening the world."

As the hour of noon approached, the human tide that had ebbed and flowed through the streets began to form a stream, and this stream, passing through Central Park, divided, one part going in the direction of the palace, where the formal transfer of the government was to take place, and the other passing down the Prado to the point opposite Morro Castle.

The American soldiers occupied the Placa de Armas just in front of the palace and kept clear the street between. The people filled all the other streets around, and looked down from windows and from the roofs of the neighboring buildings.

In the reception room of the palace gathered those who by special invitation were permitted to witness the simple ceremony which preceded the retirement of General Wood and the inauguration of President Palma. The room was not a large one and the number of persons admitted did not exceed 150 or 200. The members of the cabinet, members of the supreme court, members of the Cuban Congress, the archbishop of Cuba and his escort, the governors of the various provinces, mayors, magistrates, and a few officers of the American Army and Navy, with members of the diplomatic corps, newspaper men, and less than a score of others, gathered about the center of the room.

I found that but few Americans outside of the military and naval officials were present. Senator JAMES K. JONES, of Arkansas, chairman of the Democratic national committee; Senator MONEY, of Mississippi, and his son; Senator MASON, of Illinois, and wife; ex-Senator Thurston, of Nebraska, and wife; Congressman DE ARMOND, of Missouri; Governor Jennings, of Florida, his wife and son, a few without title and the photographers, represented unofficial America. That the United States, which appointed three special envoys to witness the coronation of Edward VII of England, and one special envoy to witness the coronation of Alfonso XIII of Spain, had no envoy to testify to the interest which our people felt in the birth of a republic whose very existence was due to American intervention, was a fact frequently commented upon by both Cubans and resident Americans

THE CHANGE OF FLAGS.

At about five minutes before 12 Governor-General Wood and President-elect Tomas Estrada Palma took their positions in the center of the room. General Wood inquired for General Gomez, and, a messenger having been sent to bring him from the rear of the room, he was asked to take a position next to the President. These three, together with the President's secretary, constituted the inner group. In a circle just outside this group stood Captain Scott, the adjutant-general of the Department of Cuba, the members of the supreme court, senate and congress, and the archbishop, while crowding around these without regard to position were the remaining guests, each anxious to be near enough to hear the words spoken by the principal participants. Mrs. Palma and family stood a few feet to the rear of the President and General Wood, while General Wood's wife and the other ladies of the company occupied vantage ground near the windows.

Just at 12 a cannon shot fired at one of the forts startled the audience. It was followed by another roar, and then by another. Then the whistles of the ships lying at anchor in the harbor

Mr. Bryan well says:

In a speech delivered at Habana, President Palma said: "Words can not express my deep feeling when I see how united the people are for the good of our country. I hope they will be forever firmly cemented, making a nation dignified and honorable like her sister republic, the United States, that great honorable nation."

Is it not indeed regrettable that nothing like this can come to us from the Philippine Islands?

Did we act toward the Cubans so that they regard us as "a great, honorable nation" simply because we gave them our pledge that we would be honorable?

Or did we act as we did toward the Cubans because such conduct was in accordance with simple justice?

Then why may we not act toward the Filipinos as we acted toward the Cubans? And why may we not make it possible for some Filipino patriot to arise and pay to the United States the cordial tribute which was given by the Cuban President-elect?

In that connection listen to Professor Schurman, selected by President McKinley as president of the First Philippine Commission. He will give you food for thought and also furnish you a slight glimpse at the other, the opposite and revolting picture:

TRY THE AMERICAN WAY.

Jacob Schurman, formerly president of the Philippine Commission, in an article in the Independent, says:

"What, I ask, do you want in the Philippines? More particularly, why in any part of Luzon and the Visayan islands are you making a howling wilderness and killing children over 10 years of age? It will be said that these are the unhappy incidents of war, which is always a stern affair, very different from the holiday-making into which civilians would turn it. Be it so. Why, then, are we making war? Here are 6,500,000 fellow-Christians of ours—the only Christian nation in Asia—as highly civilized as most of the people of Central and South America. What do we want of them? We have never told them. Thank God, there is a more excellent way. Drop coercion and try conciliation. Give the Filipinos what they want, not what you think is good for them. Regard them not as Sioux or Apache Indians, but as Christianized and civilized brown men, ranking with the Japanese."

When gentlemen tell me that Mr. McKinley was the author of the policy in the Philippine Islands, I say in answer, first, that I do not care whether he was or not; that the fact, if it be one, is beside the argument of the question and irrelevant; and second, that I am willing to put what Mr. McKinley did in Cuba against what he wanted to do in the Philippines. [Applause.] I have given you one picture—the one presented in Cuba.

What is the other—the picture in the Philippines? I am not going to paint it. God forgive us, no man that loves his country wants to paint it. Such as it is, you know it. Which one of these two pictures do you like best? And if you are not ashamed of what we have done in Cuba, and I do not believe you are—because if you are ashamed of it you are the only human beings on the surface of the globe that are—then you need not be ashamed of doing likewise in the Philippines.

If it was not cowardly to keep your faith in Cuba because you promised it, and if it was not cowardly nor the part of "a weakling" to promise it because it was right, then it will not be cowardly to promise and to do the same thing in the Philippine Islands.

That is what we Democrats promise in our substitute bill and propose to do under the operation of that bill. If the Cubans are capable of a sufficient measure of self-government to entitle them to national independence, then, by the testimony of Admiral Dewey and President Schurman, the first chairman of the Philippine Commission, by the testimony of Mr. Forman, who spent years and years in the closest domestic and social relations to the Filipino people in their homes, and who is the very wellspring of information about them, the Filipino people are still more capable of self-government. Indeed, every witness who knows both says the Filipino people are the superior race of the two.

And they are—why? Because the Filipino people are socially purer and are racially substantially identical with the Japanese, who have demonstrated to the world their capacity to control their own affairs, and their magnificent receptivity for civilization and enlightenment. The Cubans are very largely of mixed blood, and mixed at that with the most inferior race upon the earth. They both had the same religion; they both had in large measure the same language; they both had the same governmental environment.

And then, one gentleman on the other side, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], rises and says that the Democratic minority report shows that we do not think these people are capable of self-government. And he reads a line of the report which is in these words:

That three hundred years of Spanish oppression have deprived these people of—self-government.

Not the capacity for self-government. And then he reads on a little further from the report, that "they are now unprepared" for what? For "its exercise." Not unprepared mentally, not unprepared morally, not unprepared for their measure of self-government at the proper time, but having no civic institutions, having no civil government except ours—we having destroyed all other—that we ought not to go away and "scuttle" over night, leaving them without police, without armies, without any conservators of the peace, without any governmental framework, within which civilization may work. For that reason the minority bill proposes a bridge government—to bridge over the interval from the present despotic control on our part to their full measure of self-government under a government to be adopted by them such as they see fit.

A people may be unprepared for the exercise of self-government at a given time, because they have no institutions by means of which to exercise it. Why, sir, the State of Pennsylvania tomorrow, if it had not justices of the peace or governor or legislature or sheriff, or any other officers of any sort, would be left in chaos and anarchy. True, the people of Pennsylvania, with their high degree of civilization, would in three days, in every township, correct that state of affairs. They would form vigilance committees which would hold the lawless element down until they could organize some sort of government. But for the time being there would be anarchy, and no exercise of self-goverment.

Yet the gentleman takes hold of that clause of our report and tries to say that we ourselves deny that those people are capable of self-government. Surely the gentleman must have seen the difference between the sentence as written—"three hundred years of Spanish oppression have destroyed self-government"—and the sentence as he would have you understand it—"three hundred years of Spanish oppression have destroyed the capacity of self-government."

In this connection, and in connection with what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] said about "galvanizing the sixteenth century onto the twentieth," I want to say this, that I am a thorough believer in the doctrine of political evolution. I know how governments on this earth have started; with family government first, under the head of the family; and then under the head of the tribe, when sons and grandsons and their wives had made of the family a tribe; and when the tribe became too numerous for common pasturage of herds, then probably with a confederation of tribes with the oldest, the strongest, or the most warlike man for the time being at the head of this "clan," as it had become; how that gradually went along until it developed, in order to prevent wars of succession at every decease of a ruler, into hereditary succession of the king man, that is, the able man, the man who knew, the man who could, the man competent to govern.

And then I know how still later, in the process of time, people thought it wisest to select their king men, not by process of war, not by process of hereditary succession, but by process of free selection among the citizenship, this citizenship being coextensive with the blood—kinship—the fraternity; and I know as well as anybody that, while there are peoples prepared for one given stage of that evolution, there are other peoples who are not prepared for it. But I know this, too, that there never was in all the history of this world—never once—an evolution by gunshot wounds; that nobody was ever shot into civilization; that no civilization was ever superimposed upon any people by force; that no people can be furnished by force with "canned liberty" or canned civilization. If such ever seemed to be the case, it was a sham civilization, the crust of which must burst, which must go to pieces at the very first volcanic eruption of the inside forces, which had been held down by artificial means.

It is you who are attempting to ingraft upon the twentieth century institutions of the American people, a people not farther ahead in the process of evolution than the sixteenth or the seventeenth century—trying to poison our body politic with their citizenship; or if you shall not do that, then trying to degrade the body politic by forcing it into necessities of tyranny and atrocity; arising from the environment itself and the very nature of the self-set problem you are trying to work out.

Then there came on the stage my genial friend from California [Mr. KAHN]—and if ever there was a genial man in this world and a good friend, it is he—and his position just shows how far a good, kind-hearted, big-hearted man can be carried by the trend of events. He is an optimist, as he says. He began by saying he loved to believe that men were honest and gentle. So do I. He loved to believe men are not cruel. So do I.

But suppose I know that a man is dishonest, suppose I know he is not gentle, suppose I know he has been cruel, is my optimism to prevent me from denouncing his cruelty and denouncing him for disgracing my own Government, my own nation, and my own army? I say my own army, because I don't belong to the army—the army belongs to me as a part of the people.

Why, he says "nothing will ever baffle the skill of American statesmanship." Mr. Chairman, that is one of the most common mistakes made in the world. If anything excites my commiseration and pity and "makes me tired," it is to hear Americans or Englishmen or Germans or Frenchmen—and I have heard them all—making exceptions of themselves from all the rules of human nature. "Greece went this way, Rome went that way, Venice fell in another way, but I am a Frenchman, I am a German, I am an Englishman, I am an American! Nothing can happen to my great people."

But after all, within certain broad racial lines, you are just exactly like the balance of mankind—you are a man, and the seeds that bring certain harvests in Greece or Rome or England or Venice will bring that harvest here, and you need not imagine that you can be one of the pilots upon a ship of state and can deliberately direct that ship toward the rocks and when you come upon the rocks escape shipwreck. [Applause.] Why, what do you imagine, Mr. Chairman, makes the superexcellence of the American people to-day? Why are we the greatest people on the globe to-day? What is the secret of our national greatness? Is it because we are the richest people on the surface of the globe? Oh, no. Italy in the days of Augustus and of the emperors for one hundred and fifty to two hundred years afterwards was much richer, man for man. Even our millionaires, most of them, are hardly able to invest in railroad stocks as much as some of the great magnates of Italy spent upon a banquet. Is it because we exceed other people in territoriality? Oh, no. If so, Russia and some other countries, the Empire of Alexander, and the Roman Empire would have exceeded us in civilization and greatness. Is it because we are the most intelligent or best-educated people upon the surface of the globe? Oh, no. Why, the average citizen of Prussia is better educated than ours to-day. And yet we are the greatest people. Is the average American citizen any stronger physically, any wiser mentally, any better morally, than the average subject of the Kaiser or of the King of Great Britain? Not a bit of it. You need not imagine he is either. What has made us, then, the greatest people upon the surface of this earth?

I will tell you; the fact that we have been the freest people upon the surface of this earth; free by natural aptitude, free by the inheritance of English laws, free by opportunity of environment, free by political institutions which we have made ourselves, free from the burden of war taxes, free from militarism, free from the thirst for glory, free from colonial greed—a great people of equal citizenship within an immense, magnificent continental area, building up from day to day, upon the shoulders of each generation which had gone, a higher civilization. [Applause.] My friends, you need not think you can satisfy a thirst for military glory or colonial holding of distant and alien countries and subject populations, or do anything else that has caused ruin to other Republics and free governments and escape the ruin that it has caused them. All the optimism in the world will not help my friend from California when it comes to that. [Applause.]

My friend was very optimistic. He went to a town there, where upon the Fourth of July, just before his arrival, the women had been "shedding tears and spreading flowers" for the insurgents, and when he came there on the 29th, I believe it was, "Hello" and

"Welcome" were the watchwords and they were all glad to see him. Keep the picture he drew so brilliantly in your mind, and yet a people so easily pacified as that needs for effective and satisfactory pacification Gen. Jacob H. Smith's proclamation to make of their territory "a howling wilderness" and to kill "everybody capable of bearing arms!" And it is necessary with a people thus described by the gentleman from California—so prone to forget past prejudices and hatred, so easily pacified—to place the period of age at which a "man"—God save the mark—is capable of bearing arms and must be killed in order to be "pacified," at 10 years!

Either my friend from California is mistaken or that great authority, H. R. J. Smith, so lovingly called by the soldiers "Hell-Roaring Jake," is mistaken, and patriotism and the fear of being charged with having made an "attack on the Army" prevents me from asserting that the man who is mistaken is General Smith. I am going to make no attack upon the Army in that respect.

The gentleman read a letter to Consul-General Wildman from Aguinaldo. I have not time to enter into it now, but I shall ask each gentleman to read it, and if that letter does not prove that Aguinaldo and Wildman were at one in the consciousness of one thing, then I misunderstand it. It proves that Aguinaldo understood that Wildman understood that he, Aguinaldo, had been expecting independence, and that that was his object, understood evidently by Wildman, in bearing arms, side by side with and helping the boys in blue, against Spanish despotism.

Nobody seriously believes that Aguinaldo and the Filipinos were fighting for a change of masters.

This phase of the question has been so fully discussed by Senator HOAR that I leave it, conscious of my inability to demonstrate a demonstration or "to gild refined gold."

And then the gentleman went on to give us some hearsay of a hearsay concerning Sixto Lopez. When we were down in the committee room we begged our Republican confreres to permit us to bring Sixto Lopez there, so that instead of hearing him by hearsay he might be heard in his own proper person, and that request was refused. Why?

And then my friend, I think, indulged after that in about the richest argument that I have heard for a long while. It was to this effect: That these Filipino people out there were really not at heart antagonistic to us; that they did not hate us; that they did not really want any independence; and he proved it by this: That when a school-teacher, who was a friend of his, went out there and interrogated the children as to what were the continents on the surface of the earth, the reply came, Europe, Asia, and Africa.

Now, how could a people, he asked, hate the American people and not be willing to be governed by the American people, if their children did not even know that America was a continent? [Laughter.] Well, by the same measure of proof exactly you could prove that we were willing, in 1897 and 1898, to be governed by the Filipinos, because a majority of our people, and quite a minority of Congressmen, did not know whether the Philippines were a continent or not. [Laughter.] I wish only one thing when I think of all this. I wish my genial friend had gone to the Philippines earlier and had seen these people sooner.

When I think of all the blood that has been spilled, of the tears that have been shed, of the homes that have been destroyed, of the fields that have been devastated, of the bad examples that have been set, because these mistaken Filipinos imagined that they wanted independence and actually fought us to get it, when my friend KAHN could have undeceived them as to their intent, I stand absolutely amazed at the lack of intelligence and prescience which kept us from sending my friend to that country as a diplomat. I know what happened when he got to that village. They were not welcoming Americans. They just looked at that rubicund countenance. There was affection for all mankind in it; there was optimism in it, and world-embracing philosophy, and of course they hollered "Welcome and hello." [Applause and laughter.]

Anybody on the surface of the earth would do it. They could by no manner of means connect that countenance with Smith's order. They did not look alike in any respect. [Laughter.] What you want to do is to go back there and say to those people, "You are mistaken. You have had wrong ideas about your own intentions. You never really meant to fight us at all;" and by some sort of Christian science faith cure you might after awhile succeed in proving to them that they never had fought at all, and then we would have real peace all over the whole country? [Laughter.]

How much better this way than Gen. H. R. J. Smith's way. Then my friend gave an instance of a Tennessee soldier who committed a horrible murder, and he said, "You would not hold Tennessee responsible for that?" No; nor do I, nor does any man with common sense hold the Army of the United States responsible for the malicious or atrocious, cruel or vindictive deed, or the deliberately murderous deed of any man who happens to wear the uniform. But you do not quite make the distinction. We will hold the Administration responsible unless the Administration punishes the men who do these things. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Did you apologize for that Tennessee soldier? Not a bit. Did anybody get up here and compare him by inuendo to Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, and Stonewall Jackson? Not a particle. Had you one word to say in his justification or excuse? Not a bit. And yet, whenever we prove a case of atrocity ordered or committed by a brute in uniform out yonder, somebody jumps up here and undertakes to prove that Sherman was equally a villain, that Sheridan was just as great a brute, and that even dear old Presbyterian Stonewall Jackson was as bad as Hell Roaring Jake Smith. What do you mean by that? The President gets up at Arlington and makes a speech. He first says "Every wrong-doer will be sought out and punished," and then in the very next breath he turns around and says that Smith's order does not compare with some resolutions passed by the Confederate Congress; not a law enacted, mind you, at all, but hot-headed resolutions introduced. True, that when the resolutions are read they do not come up to the lurid Presidential description, but what of that? What did the President mean by it all?

What is the object of it? To prove that the members of the Confederate Congress were brutes? If that was the object, nobody will believe it. All the world knows better. The "storm-cradled nation" that rose and fell, fell stainless. Was it to prove that Smith is not a brute? Why, it does not prove that. If Smith is guilty of what he has been charged with, he is a brute. If he is not guilty as charged, then he is not a brute. But citing the fact that somebody else, somewhere else, once said something bitter is no justification for Smith.

By the way, I wish I had time, but I have not, to enter into that matter. I will stop only this long, to say that the Confederate Congress never passed any law in accordance with those resolutions; that it was a mere fulminating resolution offered in the Congress, for the purpose of checking the enemy in some things that the enemy had threatened to do; a threat to retaliate if he did not desist.

Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] then came on, and he grew funny, too, about a bill that he held in his hand—the bill first introduced by us in the House—a bill written by me, and about which, therefore, I know something, and he said it was so curious that one part of the bill named "one" Senator, and another part of it named "two" Senators. If the gentleman had taken the trouble to read the Constitution of the United States he would have found about the same discrepancy. In one place we were referring to the election of the Senators, and only one was to be elected at a time. In the other place we were referring to how many Senators each senatorial district was to have, and each one was to have two. And then the gentleman later on disclosed the fact that he was not even discussing the bill actually offered here, and now, as a substitute—a Democratic substitute—but a totally different bill. So far as that is concerned he does not expect his constituents to know any better, and he thinks the speech will go just as well in Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentlemen allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes, if it is right on this question.

Mr. OLMSTED. It is on this question. I want to know if the minority have abandoned the bill which they introduced?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I say no. Not a principle in it has been abandoned.

Mr. OLMSTED. That was your bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; and the bill now offered by us is, in substance, in idea, in means, in each and in every materiality identical with it. But the Republicans of the Senate have introduced a bill and the Republicans of the House have introduced a bill. They are totally different in every aim and detail, except that both would establish a crown colony. They will be turned into one bill later on by conference. The Democrats, not being in power, could not pass two bills—one through each House—and then turn the two bills into one as a result of an after conference. We, therefore, had to have our conference beforehand, but every idea of the bill originally introduced into this House by us, to which the gentleman referred as having been framed by me, is contained in the agreed bill. Its cardinal principles are, first, a temporary or bridge government to carry these people over the gulf of political anarchy, caused by our destruction of all their civil institutions; second, to give them ultimate and final independence, and a government of their own making like other people of their own country; third, we to exercise, during the period of temporary government—a prescribed and limited period—a protectorate over them in foreign affairs; and fourth, this protectorate to be coincident in duration with our control of their foreign affairs.

There is nothing strange in a couple of bills being turned into one in conference. The only difference between us and the Republicans is that we have reported our conference bill beforehand and you of the majority will offer yours afterwards when you get together in real conference and come back to the House with it. Our bills were not so far apart at the beginning as the Republican Senate and the Republican House bills are to-day. Indeed, the difference was infinitesimal.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to come to the speech of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS].

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would like to hear the gentleman as to the constitutional power we have to exercise a protectorate over a foreign country.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, so far as that is concerned, I have not time to discuss it now; but I have never heard that power questioned. We have the power to enter into treaties of amity, peace, and commerce with other nations; and if we can enter into a treaty of amity, commerce, and peace with other nations, from that very fact it would appear that there would be nothing constitutionally obnoxious in a treaty drawing the lines of amity still closer, and making a promise to protect a treating power from invasion by somebody else or all bodies else. Nobody has ever questioned the constitutionality of the Monroe doctrine, which is a quasi protectorate over all South and Central America. If we can enter into a treaty of alliance, defensive and offensive, with another nation—which is not disputed nor disputable—then undoubtedly we can go a step further and agree with a people to defend them against the world. The gentleman from Maine will remember that the first treaty we ever made was a treaty of mutually defensive alliance with France, in which we promised to defend her West India possessions from invasion and conquest—a promise, by the way, signally unperformed. That involved a protectorate to the extent of the agreement.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I ask my colleague what we are doing in Cuba to-day?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Why, exactly the same thing. I do not want to go into that. We propose to make this protectorate by treaty as well as by a general government bill.

Now to the gentleman from Indiana. His eloquence, how inspiring it was! And his tribute to liberty, how absolutely glorious it was! And then what a great fall there was when you found that all that amounted absolutely to nothing. He was not even willing to go as far as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], after all his eloquent tribute to the spirit of liberty. He was not willing to trust these people even with a lower house of their own election, and that lower house checked by a council of our appointing, that lower house still further checked by an executive of our appointing, and by our army and naval force standing in their midst and afloat on their waters.

The gentleman drew a most pathetic picture about a soldier boy who went to the Philippine Islands, and, like many a poor boy who has been upon that national wild-goose chase, came back diseased and died. It was a pathetic picture. It was very sad indeed, and everybody sympathized with him in drawing it. But does he reflect upon what it was the boy died for? What did he die for? Did he die to defend the institutions of his country? Did he die to defend the territory of his country from invasion? Did he die to spread liberty anywhere? Did he die to perpetuate the soul of American institutions, the declaration that "all just government is founded on the consent of the governed?" The poor boy died simply because he had lived in a certain country, and that certain country had got into a certain war, and he, full of patriotic manhood, had sprung to the support of its flag, probably not knowing nor asking how the flag came to be unfurled as an emblem of war in the Philippines. That is all.

Mr. LANDIS. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. LANDIS. I will say that that boy died to give life and importance to a treaty that was passed through the Senate of the United States with the assistance of 18 Democrats.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. "That boy died to give life to a treaty that was passed" by nobody cares whom! That boy died to give life to a piece of parchment! That boy died to give life to a treaty, the underlying and fundamental idea of which is that a despot has a right to sell the independence and nationality of a people, already fighting that despot for their nationality, to a free republic. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That boy died to disprove the right of community independence which the brave and generous youth's forefathers had died on so many battlefields to establish! He died to establish the principle of colonial subjection, which his forefathers died to make effectual denial of!

Mr. LANDIS. The time for the gentleman from Mississippi to have thought of that was when the treaty was up for ratification.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have not again yielded to the gentleman, and yet he has put in this remark. The gentleman from Mississippi did think of it then, and the majority of the Democrats in this country, in and out of the Senate and House, thought of it then. The mistake of one Democrat who was a leader then and is a pure and honest man now, can not be charged up for all time against a righteous sentiment. Every Democrat in the Senate save three voted for the Bacon amendment declaring our thought then and now. But whether the Democratic party was then right or wrong—whether the Democratic party then made a mistake or not—the question is now and here, Have you, as a free republic, a right to buy from a despot the nationality and the independence of a people when you know beforehand that only by the horrors of war can you subject that people to your bargain? That is the question. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LANDIS rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I can not yield further.

Mr. LANDIS. But you asked me a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I asked the House; I asked the Republican party; I asked the country. I am carrying on this conversation with the country, to a large extent, as well as with the gentleman from Indiana. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANDIS. The gentleman asked me a question, and in answer I will say that in the Philippine Islands we are doing exactly as we did when we annexed Florida; we are doing exactly as we did when we annexed Louisiana; we are doing exactly what we did when we took California, New Mexico, and Arizona.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, if a 15-year-old boy——

Mr. LANDIS. And I will say further that when we took Florida, Andrew Jackson, a good Democrat, was President, and with California, Arizona, and New Mexico——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is so far off on his history that I clearly can not let him interrupt further; anybody that believes that Andrew Jackson was President when we annexed Florida! [Laughter.] I can not yield any further. The gentleman from Indiana well understands that I have the last speech on our side and that my time is limited. My time, under the order of the House, can not be extended.

Mr. LANDIS. Well, I want to say that was a slip of the tongue.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And the balance of the gentleman's statement was a slip of the tongue. Now, I can not yield any further.

Mr. LANDIS. But the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman will be fair.

Mr. LANDIS. I meant to say that Andrew Jackson was the strong right arm——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, well, I know that. [Laughter.] I am acquainted with the ordinary facts of history. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana is just as far off in his political philosophy as he is in his historical instances. We are not doing in the Philippines what we did in Florida. We are not doing what we did in Louisiana; nor in any other place ever annexed to this country did we ever do what we are doing in the Philippine Islands. Every man knows that hitherto we have annexed unsettled areas peopled with a white race, or else peopled with an Indian race so sparsely settled that they did not interfere with home making in the annexed territory by the sons and daughters of the American people. Every man knows that this is the first time that we ever undertook to annex against their will, fighting with arms against it, a population denser than that of the State of Mississippi to-day—every man and nearly every woman and nearly every boy of whom, if General Smith is to be believed, are fighting against us as against a despotism. The gentleman knows, or ought to know, that the American flag never before went anywhere that it was not hailed as a harbinger of liberty, and as a protector of the helpless and defenseless and scattered people against savages and against foreign power. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We always promised beforehand to the population of territories hitherto annexed, full and equal participation in American citizenship. This was enough to make them hail the flag gladly. We can not and ought not to do that with these oriental people; we ought, therefore, to let them go forth free from the "house of bondage." If the gentleman does not know all this, he had better continue his study of political philosophy and of the spirit of American history in some other and better school than that in which he learned his historical facts. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman tells us that the boy said just before he died that the soldiers in the Philippines did not want it said hereafter that they had "followed a retreating flag." The gentleman from Indiana said the flag retreated from Tripoli, but it was "after its mission had been performed." What was its mission at Tripoli? To sink a fleet and punish an enemy, and after sinking that fleet it sailed away.

Why could it not have done the same thing at Manila? Oh, that glorious May day's victory! Why could not the memory of it have been left untarnished by our subsequent voluntary aggression against the people who witnessed it and hailed it as a harbinger of a new day of freedom and independence for them and their children?

The gentleman says that the flag never retreated from the cathedral at Mexico until there it had "performed its mission." Ay, but if there had been then men like this Administration and its backers, they would have said that it had not "performed its mission;" that "God had carried us there; that Providence had decided for us to stay; that our being there was 'an incident of the war,'" and that they "believed in a great God who, holding us in the palm of His hand, had put us in the City of Mexico, and that being helpless idiots, we could not get out." [Democratic applause and laughter.]

It had "performed its mission," had it? I say that the flag has "performed its mission" in the Philippines. What is its mission? If it has any mission, it is the mission of the American people, because the flag is but their emblem, "the outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace." And what are the American people? We are in form of government a constitutional, democratic republic; we are in citizenship equal and free, proud, and civilized, and Christian. Can it be the mission of a free people to have the flag "stay put" where it must wave over subject people? Can it be the mission of an equal citizenship, proud of their equality as a birthright, to have the flag "stay put" where the birthright does not exist, where equality must be denied, and where men must be ruled as inferiors, or else civilization itself must commit suicide.

Can it be the mission of a civilized people to attempt to spread civilization by force of arms? Can it be the mission of a proud people to keep a flag "put" simply for the sake of national prestige? And what sort of national prestige? If it were in a war against Great Britain or Russia or France I could understand why men should say "we will not follow a retreating flag." I can understand how, if I were engaged in mortal combat with the gentleman from Indiana, I would decline to admit that I was wrong till I had at least fought my fight. But if I had a child in my arms whom I was punishing, and recognized while I had him there that I had been wrong, I would not think that my prestige required me to keep on punishing him.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, brave men never fear being called cowards. [Applause.] And great nations never fear to take their heels off weak and helpless peoples for fear they will "lose national prestige." Cowardly, indeed! Cowardly retreat! Does the gentleman imagine, does anybody imagine, that the world will conclude, if America takes the flag down in the Philippine Islands, that her reason for taking it down is because she is afraid of the Filipinos?

Is it an unperformed mission of the flag to "stay put" in the Philippines?

Can it be the mission of a constitutional republic with limitations of power upon its governors to let the flag "stay put" where that flag must wave over a people governed outside of the constitution? Can it be the mission of a democracy to let the flag "stay put" in the Philippine Islands where our sway can not be democratic, but must be either military—essentially a one-man power—or by a commission or viceroy and council—essentially an oligarchic government?

What is a democracy? What does the temple of democracy rest upon? It rests upon the four pillars of Liberty, Equality, Fraternity, and Intelligence. There can be no true liberty without actual and voluntary equality; and there can be no accepted equality without genuine fraternity; and there can be no real fraternity unless it be based upon blood-kinship, or race assimilation, or else upon the willingness to assimilate by blood kinship. Oh, gentlemen, you can not by treaties, you can not by law, do away with the stubborn facts of nature. And all this world has not shown one instance, and this world never will show one, where two races unequal—one white and the other colored—have ever been able to rule any country, however small, together, in unison with one another. One must govern, and the other must submit. Like oil and water they will not be mixed; even when shaken, the globules will appear separately. The governed may revolt and themselves become the governors; if so, the other race must in its turn submit or be exterminated, as in Haiti.

You can not by all the legislation in the world legislate into existence an equality which does not exist in fact. And no equality exists in fact unless it be based upon fraternity. And fraternity must be based upon the capacity of and willingness for blood kinship.

The best way for these races to do justice and to remember the common Fatherhood of God, is to avoid, where possible, attempting to live in the same political house.

Can it be the mission of a Christian people to hold these Filipinos in subjection—they a Christian people themselves? I am going to put into the RECORD an address delivered to women by a daughter of Sixto Lopez, which has nothing to do with politics, because I want the women of America—the mothers and sisters and wives and daughters and sweethearts—to learn that there are in the Philippine Islands people who are mothers and wives and sisters and daughters and sweethearts and that they are as highly cultured as they themselves are; that they are as gently nurtured as they themselves are; that they are as highly Christianized as they themselves are; that they are capable of expressing themselves as well; that they, unlike any other women of any other race in the Orient, are held and tolerated as equals by their husbands and brothers. This document does not raise any question of a political character. This woman merely gives a description of family life and society life in the Philippines, and that life will compare favorably with such life in Pennsylvania, Indiana, or Mississippi. I do not mean to say, of course, that the whole population of the Philippines will compare equally well. But I do mean to say that there is already there the germ from which can come a governing power which can furnish those people a right and proper self-government. I want to interest the women of America in the women of the Philippines. [Applause by the ladies in the galleries.] When I hear of military glory, martial deeds, and national prestige in the Philippines, I somehow see another picture—the poor brown woman escaping from the flames of her bamboo hut, stepping over a dead husband, killed while defending his miserable home—but still his home—the brown woman with her baby at her breast! The vision will not down.

THE WOMEN OF THE PHILIPPINES.

[Address of Señorita Clemencia Lopez at the annual meeting of the New England Woman Suffrage Association, May 29, 1902.]

MADAM CHAIRMAN, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: It gives me very great pleasure to greet the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association on behalf of the women of my own country. I have yielded to your kind invitation to tell you something about the condition of women in the Philippine Islands, in spite of my inexperience and lack of literary skill, for which I pray your indulgence, and have had the courage to speak to you because I am glad of this opportunity to address you, so that you who are kind enough to give me your courteous attention may have a better idea and may form a different and more favorable opinion of the Filipinos than the conception which the generality of the American people have formed, believing us to be savages without education or morals.

I believe that we are both striving for much the same object—you for the right to take part in national life; we for the right to have a national life to take part in; and I am sure that, if we understood each other better, the differences which now exist between your country and mine would soon disappear.

You will no doubt be surprised and pleased to learn that the condition of women in the Philippines is very different from that of the women of any country in the East, and that it differs very little from the general condition of the women of this country. Mentally, socially, and in almost all the relations of life our women are regarded as the equals of our men. You will also be surprised to know that this equality of women in the Philippines is not a new thing. It was not introduced from Europe, but was innate, and the natural expression of the love and respect which a man ought to feel toward his mother, his wife, and his daughters. And I believe there is no country in the world where family life is held in higher esteem or where there is more respect for family relations than in the Philippine Islands.

Long prior to the Spanish occupation the people were already civilized, and this respect for and equality of women existed. Dr. Antonio de Morga, the first Spanish governor-general, in his history published in 1609, gives an interesting account of Philippine life before the Spanish invasion.

"The grand ladies," he says, "wear crimson, and some have silk and other stuffs woven with gold, and edged with fringes and other ornaments. * * * Many wear chains of gold around the neck, bracelets on the wrists, earrings, and rings on the fingers, of gold and precious stones. * * * They are also daintily shod, with shoes of velvet and embroidered with gold, and wear white robes like petticoats. They also use silk parasols, which they carry as a protection against sun and rain. * * * They take great care of their hair—rejoicing in its being very black—which they tie gracefully in a knot at the back of the head. They take much care, also, of their teeth."

Dr. De Morga also gives a brief description of their occupations, and of the respect in which women were then held, which corresponds with the conditions found in this country.

"The women," he says, "have for their employment and occupation needlework (i. e., fancy work), in which they excel very much, as in all kinds of sewing. * * * In their visits, and in going about the streets and to the temples, both men and women are careful in their deportment. The ladies go in front, and behind them come their husbands, fathers, and brothers."

All this, although relating to a period between three and four hundred years ago, is in striking contrast with the condition of women in India and China, and the East in general.

But perhaps it will be more interesting to you if I tell you something about the Philippine women at the present time. I know that the Philippine women are not as highly educated as the majority of American women—they have never had the same opportunities—but they are in general very devoted to their families. A mother, there as here, is willing to make every sacrifice for her children; she will deprive herself of luxury, of pleasures, even of necessities in order to give them a good education and assure their well-being. The wife is very faithful to her husband, and assists him in every way. If he is rich she assists in the management of the business, acting as cashier and bookkeeper; so that in case her husband dies she is able to carry on the business successfully. Among the poorer rural classes the wife helps in the lighter agricultural work, assisting to harvest the rice, corn, and other grains.

But whatever her station, she always unites her fate to that of her husband, even in danger and misfortune; and even though her marriage be not a happy one, she never abandons him. So true is this that both in the war with Spain and in the war with America many soldiers' wives followed their husbands to the field, traversing mountains and forests and facing every danger that they might not be separated from their husbands, but might prepare their food and care for them if ill or wounded. An example of this is the fact that the wives of General Aguinaldo, of Luchan, and of Malvar were in the field, as were the wives of many other officers. A great many Philippine patriots have given up the struggle earlier than they would otherwise have done because of the dangers to which their wives were exposed by their devotion, who suffered from hunger and the attacks of the enemy. It is also interesting to see how faithful the Philippine women are when some member of the family is imprisoned, whether it be a husband, a father, or a brother.

The Philippine women are also devoted to their parents, and ready to sacrifice themselves. It is very unusual for a woman to marry contrary to the pleasure or consent of her parents, and while unmarried they never live away from home. They usually marry at twenty or twenty-five years of age, but the women of the poorer classes marry younger, often at fifteen. I have several friends who have had opportunities to make excellent marriages; but, because their father or mother opposed, they have sacrificed their love for their parents' sake.

We have been interested to observe that the American women have greater liberty than we, and different customs. They, for instance, can go alone on the streets, they can make visits, they can travel alone to other places, as I have done; but I am the first Philippine woman to leave my home and travel so far alone.

You may also like to know what are the occupations of the women of my country. Almost all busy themselves with domestic cares; those of good position do much fancy work, such as embroidery in silk, and in linen; those of the middle classes weave cloth of silk, piña, and linen. In some towns many of the well-to-do families weave the cloth for the household in their own homes, as, for example, in my own home, where we have especial servants for this purpose.

The Philippine women are also very fond of music, but the majority prefer sad and melancholy airs. Many play the piano and the harp, and some the violin and the guitar. But very few devote themselves much to reading, and we can not compare in education and general progress with the women of America, for we have not yet had any woman with the title of doctor or lawyer, or who has entered any profession, except, indeed, that of teaching, to which many devote themselves. It is, however, true that there is no university in Manila open to women, but there are six good schools for women, some of which have as many as 300 pupils, and the instruction given compares favorably with that of the best schools in Spain.

Before closing, I should like to say a word about the patriotism of the women. This is a delicate subject, for to be patriotic to our country means that we must oppose the policy of yours. But patriotism is a quality which we all ought to be able to admire, even in an opponent. I should indeed have reason to be ashamed if I had to come before this association with the admission that our women were indifferent to the cause of their country's independence. You would have a right to despise me and my countrywomen if we had so little love for our native land as to consent that our country should be governed by foreign hands. So true is this that the present Spanish archbishop, who is not accustomed in his own country to the idea of equality between the sexes, apparently came to the conclusion that the Philippine women are the superiors of the men, and understand political questions better. I should be sorry to have you believe this, however, for it is not true. But then, a celibate archbishop knows so little about the opposite sex that he can not be expected to be a judge of such matters. It is possible that some Americans may have said the same thing; but the reason is that the men in the Philippine Islands never had freedom to declare their opinions and feelings, because of the sedition laws there; but we women, taking advantage of the gallantry of the Americans, and because the law was not passed for our sex, are more free to speak our minds frankly and take part in discussion.

For this reason it would seem to me an excellent idea that American women should take part in any investigation that may be made in the Philippine Islands, and I believe they would attain better results than the men. Would it not also seem to you an excellent idea, since representation by our leading men has been refused us, that a number of representative Philippine women should come to this country, so that you might become better acquainted with us?

In conclusion, in the name of the Philippine women, I pray the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association to do what it can to remedy all this misery and misfortune in my unhappy country. You can do much to bring about the cessation of these horrors and cruelties which are to-day taking place in the Philippines, and to insist upon a more humane course. I do not believe that you can understand or imagine the miserable condition of the women of my country, or how real is their suffering. Thousands have been widowed, orphaned, left alone and homeless, exposed, and in the greatest misery. It is, then, not a surprising fact that the diseases born of hunger are increasing, and that to-day immorality prevails in the Philippines to an extent never before known. After all, you ought to understand that we are only contending for the liberty of our country, just as you once fought for the same liberty for yours.

While talking about interesting the women in this question, a few words about an American woman who has been roughly driven out of office by a Rough Rider, because her heart had gone out in sympathy to the wives and mothers and sisters and sweethearts of the distant isles, and because, out of the fullness of her heart, her mouth spake.

How far has intolerance of freedom of speech gone when a brave man—Chief Magistrate of a great and brave people finds it necessary to make political war on women! God bless them! Brave men have hitherto let them speak and write whatsoever they chose.

I shall here read the letter, for writing which Miss Rebecca Taylor was removed, even though the late Mr. McKinley's civil-service rules had to be rough-ridden over by the Rough Rider in order to give opportunity for her removal:

THE FLAG "SHALL STAY PUT."—PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S TRIBUTE TO THE "SPLENDID WORK" DONE IN PHILIPPINES.

EDITOR POST: In the face of the official Philippine horrors that are being disclosed, horrors which have been perpetrated with the knowledge and by the command of the military authorities in the islands, the American people will read with dismay that at the recent banquet of the Sons of the American Revolution the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, "drank to the health of the soldiers and sailors of the present day, who, during the last three years, have done such splendid work in the inconceivably dangerous and harassing warfare of the Eastern tropics."

Without an uncivilized mode of warfare during the last three years, the "splendid work" could never have been accomplished The struggle for liberty would still be going on in Samar had not "the soldiers of the present day" done that "splendid work" of creating a "howling wilderness." Are we to interpret the expression of the President as approval of the official barbarities committed in the Philippines the past three years? There is abundant proof that the barbarities began with the war, only increasing in degree, growing "stiffer and stiffer," as General Hughes testified, until the "splendid" work is nearing completion.

If the work done was "splendid," the workers may not be classed as "wrongdoers," subject to punishment. But should such become a political necessity, a Chaffee-Smith-Bell-Hughes-Waller-Funston scapegoat will not appease the sense of justice of the American people. They will demand the political lives of those in authority who place the seal of approval upon the diabolical work these human bloodhounds have accomplished.

What is this "splendid work" that has been done in the tropics? The glory, if glory it be, died with the booming of Dewey's last cannon. Our army officers surrendered all claim to honor by carrying on a policy of deception and trickery, which began as soon as the army disembarked upon Philippine soil. Failing by such means, they have operated under double-distilled Spanish methods until the United States counts more victims in three years than Spain dispatched in three centuries.

Is it "splendid work" to hold up a people and rob them of country and nationality at the point of the bayonet? Is it "splendid work" to turn the cannon upon allies because they decline to yield their inalienable rights? Is it a "splendid work" to sweep thousands from the earth because they take up arms in defense of home and liberty? Is it a "splendid work" to apply the torch to the homes of earth while helpless women and babes and tottering age flee before the flames that blot out those hallowed spots? Is it a "splendid work" to make God's fair isles a "howling wilderness?" Is it a "splendid work" to slay the wounded on the battlefield, to spare no prisoners of war, but to make them the target of a three days' shooting match? Is it a "splendid work" to choose by lot an innocent person—a prisoner of war—and execute him for the crime of another? Is it a "splendid work" to torture human beings until, racked with pain, writhing in agony, frenzied with anguish, the will power shattered, they admit anything charged, however false, to gain a moment's respite? Is it a "splendid work" to exterminate a people by murdering noncombatants, all over 10 years of age, leaving the remnant to the horrors of starvation? All these facts are in evidence. They have been admitted by the official perpetrators. Is this the way "strong men, not weaklings," prove their strength? This is the strength, not of men, but of demons.

Oh, what "splendid work," what valor, what heroism, what magnificent courage "the gallant Americans, wearing the uniform of the American Republic," displayed. How "gloriously have they upheld the most glorious traditions of the past," as, protected by a moving breastwork of enforced Filipino citizens, they swept forward, armed to the teeth, to valiantly battle against those fierce Malay warriors, Filipino boys of eight and ten years, come out to defend the honor of their mothers, if, perchance, they escaped the brutal massacre—come forth to avenge the slaughter of their sires and the murder of their brothers, whose lifeblood drenched the soil of their native land. What "inconceivably dangerous and harassing warfare of the Eastern tropics" was this for "the soldier of the present day."

How flattered must be the survivors of the Grand Army of the Republic, how exalted the military giants "wearing the blue and the gray," how elated the Sons of the American Revolution, whose ancestors fell at Lexington, and fought at Bunker Hill, and left the prints of their bleeding feet upon the snows of Valley Forge—what world-wide fame to have their names coupled with "those gallant (?) Americans," disgracing "the uniform of the American Republic" in the Philippines.

Long will Theodore Roosevelt drink to the health of those who wrought the "splendid work" of death ere the spirit of liberty shall be crushed from the souls of the infant heroes of the Philippines, but not till the land is left desolate, not while humanity lives in the American heart, not till the doctrine of the brotherhood of man dies in Christendom, not until God forgets His brown children will the flag "stay put" on the blood-soaked soil of the Philippines. Eternal shame on such ignoble warfare.

REBECCA J. TAYLOR.

Suppose she was too extreme in some things—I think she was—but she was yet a woman.

The gentleman wants the flag to "stay put" in the Philippines until it has "performed its mission," the mission of the people whose emblem it is—a Christian people.

Mr. Chairman, can it be the mission of a Christian people to have the flag "stay put" for the purpose of spreading Christianity—even though that were the real object in view—by insolent oppression and arrogant denial of natural rights? War, marching with red havoc through desolation—desolation wrought by fire, gunshot wounds, ravishment, and death—has nor part nor parcel with Christianity. It is the mission of Christianity to bind up wounds, not to make them; to assuage the tears of women and children, not start them; to teach home happiness, not to destroy homes; to bring men to God, not to drive them away from Him and make them doubt His mercy, aye, even His justice.

Rudyard Kipling, the poet of jingoism, was right, though in a totally different sense from what he possibly meant, when he said:

By all ye will or whisper,
By all ye leave or do,
The silent sullen peoples
Shall weigh your God and you.

When you come among them with the blood-flecked sword in one hand and the Bible in the other, while trade and official patronage, each with itching palm, smirkingly follow in your footsteps, "the silent sullen peoples" will judge you by the blood on your sword and by the itching palm, and will, alas! judge your Bible and your Bible's God by you.

No matter if, repeating the words of the poet of jingoism, you protest until your throat is parched—

By open speech and simple,
An hundred times made plain,
You seek another's profit,
To work another's gain;

they will not believe you. In the great deeps of their hearts they will call you self-deluded at best, or at worst, "Pharisees, hypocrites, liars," if, indeed, so much of the Divine Master's words they shall yet believe and quote. They will not believe, though you loud-mouth it from the house tops, that you

* * * Bind your sons in exile
To serve your captives' need.

They would rather not be "served" than be "captives," anyhow. It is true with them as of the wolf in the fable—they had rather be lean and free than fat with a collar on. They will believe that your sons come of their own will to serve their own need, or their own greed, or to feed high their own or your pride. Alas! you yourselves will know—do know—that with the exception of a few humble, obscure, and self-effacing missionaries, what they will believe of you and your purposes is God's eternal truth and your own everlasting shame.

The Divine Master, the great democrat of all the years, the corner stone of whose doctrine was the democratic truth that proves it divine, "the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man," expressed in the injunction, "He shall be chiefest among you who is servant of all," was no Mohammed, converting men to the true faith by fire and sword, but a Life, a Word, a Germ, a Leaven; a Life to imitate; a Word calling new-born men to holier purposes; a Germ to grow throughout all time and to indoctrinate all mankind with its disease-killing properties; a Leaven to leaven the whole lump of humanity so that it shall finally burst its selfish crust, so that it shall some day cease to be true that "man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn." [Prolonged applause.] Surely it can not be the mission of a Christain democracy to imitate Mohammed rather than Christus himself—the Christ—whose life and teachings alone have made a democracy possible for any great number of men.

Surely it can not be the mission of a proud people, proud of their historical development and enlightened standing among the nations of the earth, to send their youthful soldiery to martial achievements of whose results they can not be proud. No war ever had a holier inducement than the one from which we have just emerged. As strange, almost ridiculous, as it may now seem, in the face of what has since happened, it was in its incipiency a war for humanity. The common sense and common conscience of the common people stamped it as such. We Democrats extorted a pledge that it should be so, and pinned that pledge to the act of intervention.

Hence it was that when Hobson steered the Merrimac into the harbor of Santiago, amid shot and shell, mooring her just where she was wanted; when the brave Yankee admiral, Dewey, regardless of mines under his keel, of land fortifications to his left and right, and of a Spanish fleet to his front, sailed into the beautiful bay of Manila; when the brave Southern admiral, Schley, ran aground and destroyed Cervera's fleet off Santiago; when Wheeler and the Rough Riders—New York dudes and Texas cowboys side by side—charged headlong over the narrow causeway amid a shower of missiles from unseen weapons, fired with smokeless powder, up the heights of El Caney, straight into the entrenchments of the Spanish infantry, when these things happened, huzzas from Maine to Texas greeted their achievement, and the American people "held their hearts up higher for those who were fighting afar."

The instinct was right, but the scene shifts The old Spanish war is over. A new war is on, with people whom we arrogantly call "rebels," who but yesterday were fighting side by side with us against a common enemy. Otis and Lawton, at the head of as brave men as those who fought at Santiago, mowed down in one day at the battle of Manila with Krag-Jorgenson rifles and heavy artillery, with no material loss to themselves, 4,000 men and women. It can never be forgotten that the women were fighting side by side in the ranks with the men for what they believed to be the defense of their hearthstones and the sacred rights of local and individual freedom. Mowed down 4,000 men and women, a great part of them armed with bows and arrows!

Where can he be found who is proud of that day's work? What huzzas have rent the air for Waller? Where have caps been thrown aloft in exultation when H. R. J. Smith, of Howling Wilderness fame, has been named? Whose hearts beat higher while reading the Samar order? The truth is, we are for the first time in American history ashamed, not of our soldiers, but of the character and results of American victories and of the cruel necessities of their hard service.

It is not "the white man's burden we are bearing," Mr. Chairman, but the white man's disgrace we are wearing. Aye! and even going to the uttermost parts of the earth to seek it out. Do not misunderstand me. The soldiers are not to blame; men must obey orders. The officers are not to blame; officers must order shooting when men are shot at.

But whoever is responsible for keeping officers and men in the situation whence grows the necessity which confronts them; whoever is responsible for not punishing but promoting General Smith, the author of the infamous Samar order; whoever is responsible for encouraging others to kill defenseless prisoners by promising promotion (as is rumored to be the case) to Lieutenant Brown after he had been convicted of the charge of "unnecessarily killing an unresisting prisoner;" these will have an awful day of reckoning, of quaking, and of terror before them when that day shall come upon which God and the American people, reason-informed and conscience aroused, shall pronounce judgment.

Who is responsible? Who is commander in chief? Who can jerk off epaulets, if the wearers have disgraced them? Who has failed to reduce brutes to the ranks when a word from his lips might have done it?

But we are told that "war is hell" and that, therefore, nobody ought to be punished or blamed for making it more hellish. We are told that criticism of atrocities is "maudlin sentimentality," and that we can not have war without atrocity. Everybody knows that war must have its horrible and brutalizing incidents, but I hope that the old-fashioned idea that honorable and brave men ought to so conduct themselves as to minimize its horrors as much as possible has not passed away. When I hear people talking that way, there recurs to my memory some lines that were written by Russell Lowell and published in the Bigelow Papers. With a change of name, here they are:

We wuz gittin' on nice up here to our village,
With good old idees of wuts right and wut ain't;
We kind o' thought Christ went agin war and pillage,
An' thet eppylets warn't the best mark of a saint.
But Ted E
Roosevelt, he Sez this kind o' thing's an exploded idee, and that we must live a "strenuous life." Aye; but what is a strenuous life? What sort of a life is rightly strenuous? Is it that of the professional fighter, regardless of the cause for which he fights? I think not. Are we to teach that fighting, in and of itself, is a noble thing?

It is true that we ought not to lead lives of ignoble ease and that our lives should be strenuous; but strenuous, strong lives are what? I see in my mind's eye pictures of a real and rightly strenuous life. I see the blacksmith, with his arm bared, hammering away upon the anvil. I see the farmer following the furrows, planting the seed with hope of a harvest engendered by faith in Providence and in nature's laws. I see him going home at the end of the day's work with apparently little done; at the end of the week's work even, with not many furrows added to those already plowed. I see him at his home amongst his children, teaching them the plain, old-fashioned virtues of frugality, industry, honesty—faith in reaping a harvest where proper sowing has been.

I see the preacher in his pulpit, trying to bring men to higher thinking and better living. I see the missionary abroad, taking his life in his hand, as Peter and John and Paul did before him, at once teacher and doctor and friend.

What play actors on the stage of strenuous living are Rough Riders in comparison with this real strenuous life! There is no nobler demonstration of love in the world than that of a true soldier, because no man shows his love better than by offering to die for his country; a volunteer soldier fighting to protect the territory, the liberties, or the institutions of his country—fighting, not because it is his profession to fight, but because he has a cause to fight for, and it is his duty. Such soldiers were they who hurled back the flood of Asiatic power at Marathon; who fought at Salamis; who, under Charles the Hammer, saved Europe to the white man's and the Christian man's civilization from the menaces of Orientalism and Mohammedanism. Such were they who starved at Valley Forge; who became diseased and died upon the prison ships. Such were they who charged at Gettysburg, and who resisted the charge there; men whose hearts and motives, and the causes for which they fought, ennobled war itself.

I do not know what the rest of you think, but I do not want my children taught that the real strenuous life—the life, therefore, to be lived—is that of the professional fighter—regardless of the cause for which he fights—whether he be a Texas cowboy or a West Point graduate; though Texas cowboys are fine fellows in their way, and West Point graduates are elegant and brave gentlemen in theirs, having fought the fight of freedom upon a hundred battlefields as nobly and as grandly as any volunteer soldier ever dared. Up to now they were never called upon to engage in anything but noble strife—war sanctified by its aim.

But there are others who talk of "manifest destiny." Ah, my friends, there is a destiny for each of us, man or nation; but there is no destiny made manifest to any of us, save that destiny alone which is for all men and all nations a manifest destiny, namely this: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he surely reap."

If ye sow the seeds of criminal aggression, watered by women's tears and men's blood, ye shall reap human hatred. If ye sow cruelty, ye shall reap savagery, and some of the harvest will be reaped in your own breast. If ye sow contempt for constitutional guarantees and limitations abroad, ye shall reap centralization and despotism at home.

Reap them when? Immediately? No. How long was Rome's harvests ripening? But it came.

If ye sow chains abroad, ye shall reap slavery at home. How long before the crop is ready for the reaper, it matters little.

If ye sow over-expansion to the ends of the earth, ye shall reap final exhaustion everywhere.

In a speech made at Winona, Miss., some two years ago, I said that I thought the great German historian, Gervinus, had told the secret of the cause of the downfall of Napoleon's power and of the Napoleonic career. He told it in the one German word—"Ueberspannung"—overstretching. Had Napoleon been satisfied with the natural boundaries of France—the Mediterranean, the Alps, the Pyrenees, and the Rhine—he could have handed down to his son a great, strong, rich, peaceful, magnificently organized and comparatively free empire; but he would a-world-powering go, until after awhile his armies had ceased to be French soldiers fighting for France, but were a polyglot assemblage fighting everywhere for "glory," for "prestige," for empire, for greed. On the invasion of Russia, the grande armee was composed of Poles, Italians, Germans, adventurers of all sorts, gathered about the old army of the French Revolution, still a nucleus.

The history of Rome teaches the same lesson. The magnificent white race, at that time unmixed, populating Italy, shattered itself against the shores of Asia, and Rome, the unconquerable, fell an easy victim to the vices of her Oriental subjects.

Athens, too, would a-world-powering go. Demagogues hounded on the Sicilian expedition. The historian marks it as the beginning of the end for the "fierce democracie" protected by Pallas Athene.

There is an expansion which is right. There is an expansion which is Ueberspannung.

Our utmost natural boundaries are plain to me, at any rate. They are the Arctic Ocean on the north, the Pacific on the west, the Atlantic on the east, and the line of the Isthmian Canal on the south, together with the islands which protect and defend the Mediterranean. Our natural methods of expansion seem also plain to me—peaceful expansion over assimilable races in our own hemisphere, or expansion as the result of just war, over willing people, qualified for citizenship—sources of strength, and not of weakness.

I want us to remain the United States of America. I hope we will remain the United States of America, and will not become the United States and Dependent Colonies of America and Oceania.

If you obey the behest of the poet of imperialism and "yearly bind your sons to exile," and "send forth the best ye breed," you will leave the race at home to be propagated by men of inferior mold, and to deteriorate as did that of Greece after the plains and cities of Asia had drawn to themselves her best blood; as did that of Rome, made less virile by the continued abstraction of the bolder spirits who served in the legions, their places left vacant in Italy, or taken by slaves; as did that of Spain, after the yearly drain for three hundred years of her best blood and boldest spirits to Mexico, Peru, the Tropics, and the colonies.

You remember how whole villages were depopulated in Spain because the men had gone to the Americas, gold-hunting and savage-killing. You will remember that in the time of Ferdinand and Isabella and Charles V there was no infantry in all Europe comparable in courage and constancy to that of Spain, formed of the sturdy and abstemious peasantry of Leon, Castile, Arragon, and Andalusia. You will remember that before England had a free Parliament, Spain had a free Cortes. You know what the Spaniards were then. You know what they are to-day. The deterioration has come about in two ways: First, by the destruction of the boldest and most adventurous spirits; and, secondly, by the reactionary effect upon the temper of the people at home of deeds of barbarity and cruelty perpetrated by the race abroad—deeds for which Spanish colonial policy was responsible; deeds made necessary in order effectively to carry out that policy. Necessity was the plea of Cortez and Pizarro, as well as of Weyler and our Gen. H. R. J. Smith.

Mr. Chairman, what you sow is the first step. What you reap is the last step. In history, the first step is frequently years, sometimes generations, removed from the last, but it remains, none the less, the first step in the wrong direction and leads irretrievably to destruction of republican institutions, if not retraced.

Mr. Chairman, God does not make us do things, either as individuals or as nations. We are free agents to retrace wrongly directed steps if we will.

Oh, the infinite hypocrisy and weakling cowardice of the plea; "God put us there, we can't help it." The responsibility to perpetuate wrong is of God's imposition! Blasphemy!

It is false. It was of our own seeking. We sought it energetically and as the proceedings of the Paris Peace Commission show by every changing pretext of hook and crook.

The highest and most potent destiny of any people is home development in an environment of equal opportunity for each and freedom for all. You may cry out against trusts, monopolies, and combines, against law-given privileges and law-conferred favoritism all you please, but if the attention of the people be diverted from them to more exciting though less important things, the cry will remain a barren cry. The Tories in England have always been the strenuous foreign-policy party. Thus the people's eyes are directed away from home abuses. You may cry out for equality all you please, but if you introduce alien races, inferior in their nature and their character, neither your cry nor the law can countervail the stubborn forces of nature. We want no more citizens to whom we can not safely give equality. Already the symmetry of our institutions is marred by the fact that we have among us a race to whom we can not, with any common sense regard for the safety of the Republic, or for "the general welfare," grant equal participation in public life. To do so were suicide—the worst crime.

To sum it all up, the true mission and manifest destiny of a democratic republic is the development of its true riches, and its true riches are a strong and intelligent manhood and a pure and intelligent womanhood—a race, therefore, which grows stronger and better and wiser from generation to generation, "mounting on its dead self to higher things," so that "the voice of the people" which controls governmental action may day by day more and more nearly approximate "the voice of God," which it is fabled to be, so that there may really be a "common sense of most to hold a fretful state in awe."

Such a government would accomplish, as nearly as can be, Thomas Jefferson's dream of the object of government—"the freedom and happiness of the individual."

But you say, "Yes, our manifest home mission is increased civilization, intelligence, and comfort with each generation, developed in the atmosphere in which these things can best be developed—the atmosphere of intelligence, liberty, equality, and fraternity. But have we no mission abroad?" The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] dwelt on this idea. Are we to confine these great blessings to our own people? Are we to sit apart forever "in selfish isolation?" Are political salvation and social regeneration to be confined to the children of Abraham? Are we to hide our light under a bushel?

Upon due consideration, foolish queries these.

How can the "isolation" of which you complain, which consists simply in a determination not to conquer, dominate, nor enslave others, be called "selfish?"

How could we "hide our light under a bushel," if we struggled and toiled to do so ever so much. It is in the very nature of a democratic light to shine; to shine like a star of hope into the darkest recesses of human nature.

> How far that little candle throws his beams!
> So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

Democracy has its thousand messengers which hourly speed by day and by night into the uttermost parts of the earth; commerce, literature, the mail that carries daily to thousands of homes where white men live in Europe, Asia and Africa, South America, and Australia, thousands of newspapers and letters with glad tidings of the new political evangel, the democratic gospel, the gospel of the common people—triumphant, prosperous, free, and at peace. No power on this earth could build a fence so high as to shut in or shut out the rays of that light; neither we ourselves, nor any prince, power, potentate, dominion, demon, nor devil whatsoever. All we have to do is to let it shine; to see to it that the light is not extinguished at home; to protect it from domestic foes and from foreign attack.

He who does not realize all this has read history amiss. If the freest and most democratic peoples in the world to-day beyond the borders of our own country are those of the British colonies—Canada, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand—it is because, as wise English historians themselves tell us, our revolt and successful establishment as a democratic nation taught England the policy and necessity of giving civil rights and self-government to her colonies, and taught her colonists to demand them as their right.

All there is of liberty and equality in Europe to-day, outside of Switzerland and Holland, and both have increased astonishingly, incalculably, within the last hundred years, even under monarchic forms, has been secured as the result of the destruction of feudal institutions before the sweep of the French revolution, and that revolution drew its earliest and best inspiration and rallying cries from America, and its chief encouragement from American example and success. The hybrid races of South and Central America are not yet arrived at that stage of political, social, and religious evolution where they can practice in peace the lessons of freedom and equality, but such of these things as they have they drew from us.

Only the other day, in Armenia, it was where American missionaries had been with schoolbooks, not swords, that the fitful light of freedom shone for a moment, to be extinguished in blood. The leaders of the revolt against Spanish oppression in Cuba were men whose eyes were set on the encouraging beacon light of the great Republic. Many of them were men who had been educated in the United States. The Filipinos themselves drew the inspiration to fight for liberty and independence from us, and had gladly hailed us as their example and light until they found us proclaiming our sovereignty and consequently their oppression.

Well did Christ say, "I came not to send peace, but a sword." And yet in his last moment of freedom on earth, just when betrayed to prison, he enjoined the impetuous Peter to put his sword up. What did he mean then?

It was this leaven of democracy to which he referred as a sword—this theretofore unheard-of democratic principle that, "whosoever is chiefest among you shall be the servant of all." It was this "word" which was to expand in the hearts of men until it made them burst the fetters of the world. This "word" which shall be the cause of strife among men until it shall be "fulfilled" everywhere. [Applause.] Wherever to-day men are born booted and spurred to ride over their fellows, wherever special privileges are conferred and equal rights are denied by law, this "word" does enter and shall enter into the bosom of society like a sword.

Every monarch of continental Europe realized it but yesterday, if you did not. There was not one of them who slept easy when he contemplated the possible coming of what Bismarck called, and what they called, "the revolution," meaning, the awakening of democracy—the bursting forth of the forces of the democratic volcano through the crust under his feet. There is not one of them who did not, a while since, look askance at us as a menace, by the example of our peace, prosperity, and progress in triumphant democracy, to "the established order of things" in the monarchies of the world, meaning its vested privileges and inequalities. The more free and equal, therefore, we are at home, and the more peaceable, happy, and prosperous our people are as a consequence, the more irresistible will be the subtle influence and force of our example to penetrate darkest corners and burst strongest fetters—great world-object-lesson, as we are.

Mr. Chairman, shall there ever be, as Tennyson dreamed there would be, "a parliament of man, a federation of the world," a real world conquest of that sort? God only knows. But if it shall come, it will come in this subtle way, and largely because our own people, our branch of the English-speaking race, have not been faithless to our true mission, nor heedful of false prophets calling us to false missions.

But, alas, are we to keep our forms, but change our spirit? Already we are being recognized as one of themselves by the camp-controlled and colony-seeking "world powers," and already we are taking a foolish pride in the recognition. But a little while ago we were The World Power, born of God by force of soul. Now it looks as if we were ambitious to become one of the pseudo world powers, born of the devil by force of greed, "prestige," and pride.

I can not believe that for us the Ten Commandments—codifying the consensus of human opinion throughout all ages concerning what is right and what is wrong—are, in the public opinion, binding upon us individually only, and not nationally. When, amid the thunders of Sinai, the command "Thou shalt not steal," was given to man, it was given to him not individually alone, but in the aggregate as well—given to him as a citizen, as a factor in self-governing communities, as well as in individual relation to his neighbor. When, amid the rolling clouds and thunder peals, that command was voiced by Jehovah, it meant not only that I should not steal my neighbor's miserable purse or watch, but that the nation of which I was a part should not, by my cooperation, steal the liberties, the franchises, the lands of other peoples as this majority bill here offered by the Republican majority will cause us to do; and when the command came, "Thou shalt not covet," it meant not only that I should not covet my neighbor's wife or house, but that the nation of which I was a part should not covet, by my connivance, the territory of other peoples.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the minority has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I had the honor in 1898 to discuss the general principles which should guide us in a right and natural expansion; I have had no reason to withdraw or modify a single opinion, prediction, or warning then uttered by me, but many reasons to repeat and emphasize them. I shall insert them in the RECORD. I thank the House for its attention. [Long and prolonged applause.]

SPEECH OF HON. JOHN S. WILLIAMS.

The House being in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and having under consideration the bill (H. R. 9008) making appropriations for the Post Office Department—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi said:

* * * * * * * *

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to argue this question from its real standpoint, and I like to get back to original principles in this as in all things.

Our forefathers in building this Republic of lesser Republics constructed it with the cement of an idea antagonistic to the idea which had dominated the polity of all the republics of antiquity—whether democratic or aristocratic or plutocratic, whether in Rome and Athens, in Sparta or in Carthage. This idea of our forefathers, which cements together all of our institutions, traditions, and ideals, was that, "The state was made for the citizen, not the citizen for the state."

They sought not the splendor and the power and pomp and the world domination by land which was sought and attained by Rome, nor the splendor and power and world domination by sea which was vainly sought by the "fierce democracie" of Athens, and by the merchant princes of the Carthaginian plutocracy. They sought the freedom and happiness of the individual citizen, freedom personal, political, civil, and religious, and, as inclusive of all these, the freedom to pursue happiness, each one in his own way, without injury to others.

This was their end. All other things were means to that end—government itself, power itself, territory itself.

The first great typical American—as contradistinguished from the colonial Englishman—Thomas Jefferson, said that the object of all right government was the freedom and happiness of the citizen.

Our ancestors, however, were not unmindful of the fact that in order to the attainment of this end a compact and defensively strong country was necessary, that the only people who can remain long free is a people which, while shearing its own government of all powers dangerous to the exercise and perpetuation of local and individual liberties, shall yet be powerful enough in men and resources, in territory, and in the absence or weakness of border enemies to strike caution, if not awe, into the hearts of would-be aggressors.

Happiness and freedom within were only to be attained by peace without. Such peace was to be maintained only by the notorious possession of power to resist aggression; such power could, in the absence of standing armies and great fleets, lie only in an immense territory, compact, contiguous, filled by a population homogeneous, free, proud of their freedom and jealous to maintain it, and equally jealous to maintain their country's independence and unity, for these are the expression and the shield to the outer world of their freedom. Jefferson and Monroe, with all their fireside and individualistic ideas, knew that the fireside and the individual were themselves not safe with Spain in control of Florida and Texas and the Pacific slope, with France in the Louisiana country, with England in Oregon and Canada.

Little by little, therefore, they and the men of their school—the Democratic party—who had sat at their feet, or at the feet of their disciples, by the use of money, diplomacy, or force, acquired all of this contiguous territory except Canada and built up this magnificent solidarity which the world calls the United States of America, and which we, in our pride, call "The American people" [applause], arrogating to ourselves the name of a continent.

The Mississippi now flows unfretted to the sea. Cuba, soon to be independent and by our intervention to pass out from under European domination, no longer threatens the passes to her mouth nor the commerce that follows the Gulf Stream. [Applause.] Canada, a happy, free, and self-governing dominion, contented and friendly, is no longer a threat to our peace on the northern border and will never become a menace to the freedom and happiness of our people unless her soil should at some time be used as a fulcrum for operations against us by her mother country. In that event Canadian absorption, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Great Lakes to the frozen seas, would complete on the north the territorial solidarity of this great American continental power, such as our ancestors dreamed it should be. [Applause.]

That would be a part of the possibilities of the fulfillment of a rational theory of "manifest destiny," and the accretion would come about in a way reconcilable to our theory, as a result of offensive tactics in a defensive war. In this way came Texas with her rightful boundary, to force the concession of which we fought Mexico in a brave and just war, Texas being already independent, and having been admitted as a State into our Union at her own request, and her territory having been invaded by Mexico. In this way came California. In the same way might the dream of a rational "manifest destiny" be made to apply (if by no fault or offensive action of ours) to continental territory to the south of us and to the northern tier of West Indian Islands, including Cuba—making, from the peninsula of Yucatan to Key West, an American Mediterranean and a mare clausum of the Mexican Gulf.

But "sufficient unto the day are the necessities thereof."

* * * These acquisitions are, I say, within the application of a rational theory of "manifest destiny"—a theory often derided, but suited to a great, compact, continental country, inhabited by free, industrious, happy, and homogeneous people.

They are within the sphere of our natural expansion as a great peace power, strong for industrial achievement, strong for the development of civilization socially and individually, and strong for defense, but weak, and desiredly weak, for offense; with no power to intermeddle with Europe and Asia, and no desire to do so; with a horror, now, I hope, and always, of the miserable military camps and naval stations of Europe, which call themselves civilized nations, standing in the arena like gladiators, encumbered with useless armor and yet afraid to move.

Gentlemen quote the examples of our ancestors in the acquisition of Louisiana and Florida by purchase, of Texas by annexation, of California, New Mexico, and Arizona by conquest, of Oregon by arbitration, as examples in favor of further annexation. Their acquisition was, on the contrary, the expression of an idea diametrically opposed to the idea underlying the desire for this acquisition. Follow me for a moment, and put your eyes, in imagination, upon the map of the United States.

In each of those cases the territory was contiguous; it was continental; the acquisition decreased the extent of our boundary, and therefore the expense of defending it; it minimized the danger of future wars by removing farther from us a possible enemy, or else by removing such an enemy from the continent; it gave us broad areas of unsettled territory for the spread of our people and the expansion of our institutions.

It added in each case to our defensive strength, and in no case violated the guiding maxim of Mr. Jefferson that "our territorial acquisitions should never be such as to require an additional navy to defend them."

These islands are not contiguous. They are over 7,000 miles from San Francisco, requiring a line of communication over 7,000 miles in length to be defended, and to be defended by a navy.

* * * * * * *

Like all island possessions, except those immediately adjacent to the continental coast line of the mother country, they would be lost in case of earnest and persevering attack in war, unless we had sea power equal to that of the enemy attacking us. Even Captain Mahan admits that that would be practically a sea power equal to that of Russia and France combined, or else to that of Great Britain.

What would that sea power amount to? Why, sir, * * * the annual cost of the maintenance of such a navy alone is $107,000,000. Moreover, in the case of the Philippines the population would not be with us, but against us—a source of weakness and fear, not of strength and confidence.

* * * * * * *

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me deflect a moment from that line of argument and ask some of my friends here, who played a game of chess not long ago with members of the British Parliament, a question. What would be thought of a chess player who would permit his antagonist to make him a present of a pawn placed in the middle of the board, upon the condition that he should subordinate his entire game to the defense of that pawn? [Applause.] Great Britain has a pawn already. She has given us a bond to keep the peace in the shape of Canada; and it has made her put up with many things humiliating to her proud spirit rather than run the risk of losing that colonial possession.

France, too, has pawns—Guadeloupe and Martinique. They are her bonds to keep the peace.

I wish Germany had some island colonies near us. Her solicitude to keep the peace would be increased thereby.

Why should we give to her and to the balance of the world a similar bond—a bond the securities upon which would be a fleet as numerous, as ably manned, as expensively equipped as that which the great island sea queen has by years of unstinted and unselfish sacrifice built up in the consummation of her traditional ideal, an ideal totally different from ours, an ideal similar to that of Athens and Carthage and Venice. Are we willing to pay the price for defending this pawn? Are we willing to pay the price and lose it?

That would be hard, Mr. Chairman, but it would be endurable. Are we willing to pay the price and succeed? By the memory of American traditions and by the hope of American destiny, I answer a thousand times no [applause]; because, Mr. Chairman, success would mean to debauch the imagination of our people with dreams of conquest and world dominion and sea tyranny that would be infinitely worse in their effects upon them and their institutions than five times the cost of the Navy, five times the burden of the tax-oppressed generations necessary to build it up and maintain it. [Applause.]

But it has been said that even if in case of war we should lose the islands we would be no worse off than now.

Who says that little knows the American people.

They would spend the last dollar of the Republic's money, they would spend almost the last drop of the blood of the Republic's children, before they would consent to give up to force anything, however worthless in itself, which they had once grasped and called their own. * * *

We have the bulldog pugnacity and pertinacity of our British forefathers. How and whence we got it I do not know, but we have also the sentimentalism of the French. We hang on like the one and worship an idea like the other.

* * * * * * *

Nothing could be more undemocratic. We would annex another race problem and would be put to it to conceive of a form of government at once possible in common sense as adequate to preserve law and order and decency and civilization, and yet at the same time democratic.

I said that on March 16, 1898, and here we are being "put to it" and not succeeding. We did not succeed in the government we gave Hawaii. We are not succeeding in the government you propose to give the Philippines by this pending bill.

It is one thing, Mr. Chairman, to face bravely, with the hopeful determination to preserve civilization, the race problems which we have, which have come to us by no fault of our own, but through the shortsightedness of Northern negro-selling and Southern negro-buying ancestors. It is another thing deliberately to annex a race problem, and, moreover, to pay for the privilege of annexing it, and to rush thousands of miles to embrace it. [Laughter and applause.]

* * * * * * *

The annexation would violate the maxim of Mr. Jefferson. It would give us a "territory requiring an additional navy to defend." That should be sufficient cause of opposition for Democrats. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

So much for American historical analogy.

Now a few words generally.

The people generally do not realize the immense step which they are called upon to take. If they did, this measure would not receive 50 votes in both Houses of men elected by them on that issue. The people are not yet ready, and I pray God they may never be ready, to leave behind them their proud and secure isolation as an American continental power—compact, all-powerful for defense, seeking home happiness, making for peace.

They are not yet ready to launch the Republic out as an intermeddling world power—to put themselves in a position where they would become, by geographical necessities, entangled in all sorts of questions pertinent to the destinies of European and Asiatic "powers, princes, potentates, dominations, and devils." They may drift unwittingly away from their ancient moorings. They will never willingly and intentionally desert the American ideal and make of power and territory, which their ancestors built up and acquired as a means to the great ends of freedom and happiness, ends in themselves. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, a proper decision of this question is, in its remote effects, of more importance than that of any issue now before the American people. The tariff, the coinage question—these, though decided wrong, may be reconsidered and decided right. The suffering is great while the wrong decision prevails, but the mistaken step may be retraced. * * * The American people, right or wrong, would never give up one foot of territory once "American" unless forced to do it by untold calamities, by humiliations so great as to break down the national pride and sap the strength of the State.

Rather than retrace their steps they would go on and on and farther on, from one island to another necessary to be taken to complement or supplement their position, to defend acquisitions already gained, or to weaken enemies made such by geographical environment. They would go on until they had stepping stones—"strategical points," Captain Mahan calls them—around the earth. In this fools' procession—magnificent, glorious, perhaps, but still a fools' procession—it is not so much the fear of check and defeat that appalls me; it is the fear of success.

I want no splendid government, no world dominator. I want a happy land, smiling with the sunlit productions of a happy, industrious, and free people. [Applause.] Imperial Rome with all her glory would be bad recompense, in my poor backwoods mind, for the loss of the traditions, institutions, sentiments, ideals, and esprit du corps of the American people—this people whom I know and love—traditions and sentiments and institutions having their roots far back in the graves of our English forefathers, transplanted, developed, improved by Henry and Adams and Mason and Macon and Witherspoon and Rutledge, watered and tended and kept from dying by Jefferson and Jackson and Lincoln, expounded by Calhoun and Webster, protected and extended on sea and on land by heroes with a thousand names.

The "trammeled up" consequences of the annexation will be to the democracy of America identical in kind, if not in degree, to what the equally ill-considered and hastily executed expedition to Syracuse was to the Athenian democracy; what the Sicilian colonizations were to the Carthaginian plutocracy; what the Asiatic conquests were to the liberties of the people of the Roman Republic; what the dead weight of the Indian Empire will some day prove to be to Great Britian—a radical departure from original principle, with no end in view upon which the tired eye of the statesman or patriot can rest—one scaled height but furnishing a standing place whence to view and covet another.

As long as you confine the eye and thought and desire within a fixed limit, and that limit the one I have indicated; as long as you remain continental and American, not world meddling; industrial, not military or naval, you will remain both secure and free. If secure and free, then happy. Beyond those limits all is uncertainty—a dreary waste of national disturbance, unbounded.

* * * * * * *

A gentleman closed his speech the other day by pointing to the flag at the Speaker's desk and saying he hoped that that emblem would float over the islands.

Mr. Chairman, wherever that emblem floats, with its stars, indicating the States, and its stripes, indicating their union, as the expression of a just government which grows from the consent of the governed, it will always remain the glorious thing that it has nearly always been. [Loud applause.] But when a self-seeking oligarchy, or a mistaken patriotism, or a mistaken covetousness, or a broad imagination with good motives or bad, leads our country and that flag out in the endless race for conquest and domination, it has lost its honor and should be furled in disgrace. We would fall, Mr. Chairman, from the level of nineteenth-century Americans to the level of the Roman mob a hundred years before Christ.

I thank the House. [Loud applause.]

I find nothing to retract in the words. It is not too late to act wisely. Congress must fix the political status of the people. Give them independence; enjoy their gratitude. Do not make of them provinces nor justify their hate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time until 5 o'clock to the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. CRUMPACKER.

[Mr. CRUMPACKER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 2295 and had come to no resolution thereon.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I present the following conference report, together with statement of conferees, on the sundry civil appropriation bill, it being the final conference report and complete agreement, and ask that it be printed.

The SPEAKER. This will be done under the rule.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13123) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 13, 17, 18, 19, 20, 23, 24, 27, 30, 32, 38, 41, 44, 141, 143, 160, 185, 186, and 191.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 16, 21, 25, 28, 29, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 42, 43, and 120, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 142: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 142, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert $2,000,000; and after the word "dollars," at the end of line 14, page 97 of the bill, insert the following: "Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to acquire leases in such lands in Hawaii as have been set aside for purposes of a military post;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. G. CANNON,
J. A. HEMENWAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13123) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report on each of said amendments, namely:

On No. 1: Strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate authorizing the acquisition of a site and construction of a hall of records in Washington.

On No. 13: Strikes out the appropriation of $20,000 proposed by the Senate for the quarantine station at Portland, Me.

On Nos. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, and 44, relating to light-houses: Makes appropriations as proposed by the Senate for light stations, as follows:

Ram Island Ledge, Portland Harbor, Maine, to cost not exceeding $166,000 under contract, $83,000; Orient Point light station, New York, $18,000; Sapelo light station, Georgia, $40,000; Peshtigo Reef light vessel, Wisconsin, $15,000; Crisps Point, Michigan, $18,000; Point au Pelee Passage light-ship, Lake Erie, $45,000, and $4,000 for maintenance of a light-ship on Southeast Shoal; Conneaut Harbor light station, $8,400; Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio, $18,000; Fort Winfield Scott, Cal., $7,000; Oakland, Cal., $19,000; Mile Rocks, California, $100,000; Browns Point, Washington, $3,200, and Battery Point, Washington, $6,000.

And strikes from the bill appropriations proposed by the Senate for light stations as follows:

Boon Island, Maine, $3,400; Stonington Breakwater, Connecticut, $6,000; tender for light-house service in Porto Rican waters, $125,000; Rockland Lake, New York, $6,450; Cape Lookout Shoals light vessel, North Carolina, $90,000;

Bodie Island, North Carolina, $7,500; depot for Ninth light-house district, Wisconsin, $50,000; Grosse Island, south channel, Michigan, $5,000; tender for St. Marys River, Michigan, $75,000; Southampton Shoal, California, $30,000; Yaquina Head, Oregon, $4,000, and Robinson Point, Washington, $4,000.

On No. 120: Appropriates $25,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the acquisition of additional land at Fort Constitution, Newcastle, N. H.

On Nos. 141, 142, and 143: Appropriates $2,000,000 for construction of buildings at and enlargement of military posts; authorizes the Secretary of War to acquire leases on such lands in Hawaii as have been set aside for purposes of a military post; strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate segregating for certain military posts sums of money out of the appropriation for military posts, and the provision proposed by the Senate authorizing the Secretary of War to accept donations of land or interests in land in connection with the establishment and maintenance of military posts and national cemeteries.

On No. 160: Strikes out the appropriation of $100,000 proposed by the Senate for a memorial bridge, with authority to contract for the same at a cost not to exceed $2,500,000.

On No. 185: Strikes out the appropriation of $25,000 proposed by the Senate for collecting statistics relating to marriage and divorce.

On No. 186: Strikes out the appropriation of $20,000 proposed by the Senate for an intercontinental railway commission.

On No. 191: Strikes out the appropriation of $3,000 proposed by the Senate to procure busts of the late Senators Morrill and Voorhees.

The Senate amendments involved in the conference report appropriated $1,283,950. Of this sum the Senate recedes from $574,350.

The bill as finally agreed upon appropriates $60,125,359.13.

J. G. CANNON,
J. A. HEMENWAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

MEMORIAL TO ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report, with the accompanying statement, on the bill (S. 5269) to provide a commission to secure plans and designs for a monument or memorial to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States, and ask that the same be printed.

The SPEAKER. This will be done under the rule.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5269) "To provide a commission to secure plans and designs for a monument or memorial to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert before the House amendment the name "Senator GEORGE G. VEST," so that the amendment will read "Senator GEORGE G. VEST and Representative JAMES D. RICHARDSON;" and the House agree to the same.

J. T. McCLEARY,
S. W. McCALL,
DUDLEY G. WOOTEN,
Managers on the part of the House,
GEO. PEABODY WETMORE,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

The bill as it passed the Senate provided for a commission to consist of the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of War. In the House the bill was amended so as to include in the commission a member of the minority of the House, Representative JAMES D. RICHARDSON. The amendment of the House was disagreed to in the Senate and the bill sent to conference in order that a member of the minority of the Senate might be added to the commission. In conference the name of Senator VEST, of Missouri, was inserted, so that the commission for the Lincoln monument or memorial will consist of the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, Senator GEORGE G. VEST, and Representative JAMES D. RICHARDSON.

BRANDING FOOD AND DAIRY PRODUCTS.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report, with statement of conferees, upon the bill (H. R. 9960) to prevent a false branding or marking of food and dairy products as to the State or Territory in which they are made or produced, and ask that the same be printed.

The SPEAKER. This will be printed under the rule.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9960) to prevent a false branding or marking of food and dairy products as to the State or Territory in which they are made or produced, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same, as follows: Page 1, strike out lines 3 to 9, inclusive, and insert: "That no person or persons, company or corporation shall introduce into any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia from any other State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or sell in the District of Columbia or in any Territory any dairy or food products which shall be falsely labeled or branded as to the State or Territory in which they are made, produced, or grown, or cause or procure the same to be done by others."

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2, which provided as follows: Page 1, line 10, after "persons," insert "knowingly;" and agree that said amendment go out.

P. J. McCUMBER,
JNO. LOWNDES McLAURIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. P. HEPBURN,
J. S. SHERMAN,
WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The statement is as follows:

Senate amendment numbered 1, from which the House recedes, is merely a change of phraseology, and neither changes the intent nor the effect of the bill.

Amendment numbered 2, from which the Senate recedes, inserted the word "knowingly," and the Senate conferees now recede from that amendment, so that the bill, in that particular, remains as it left the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8840. An act granting an increase of pension to John H. Lauchly;

H. R. 2066. An act to change the terms of the district court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania; and

H. R. 2063. An act amending an act creating the middle district of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 1026. An act to fix the compensation of district superintendents in the life-saving service;

S. 6178. An act to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act to provide for a permanent Census Office," approved March 6, 1902;

S. 3746. An act to amend section 2593 of the Revised Statutes relating to ports of entry; and

S. 3375. An act relating to the construction of a dam across Rainy River.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 6148. An act providing for the resurvey of certain townships in San Diego County, Cal.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 4949. An act to provide for the classification of the salaries of clerks employed in post-offices of the first and second classes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

RELIEF AND CIVILIZATION OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate its message disagreeing to the amendment of, and asking a conference with, the House of Representatives on the bill (S. 4284) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota,' approved January 14, 1889."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this request will be granted.

The Chair announces as Speaker pro tempore for this evening the gentleman from Maine, Mr. ALLEN.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BULL was granted leave to print remarks on the public building bill.

The SPEAKER. In pursuance of the order of the House, the House will stand in recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) was called to order by Mr. ALLEN of Maine, as Speaker pro tempore.

PHILIPPINE GOVERNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In pursuance of the order previously made, the House will now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate bill No. 2295, temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] will take the chair.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. ESCH in the chair.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

[Mr. FINLEY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to take any part in this discussion, but I will occupy a short time this evening, and I would like to call the attention of the comm ttee to some of the features of this bill.

Our Democratic brethren went with us into the Spanish war, and I will not yield to my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] in the claim that the war was brought about by the Democratic party, but all political parties took part in that war and participated in its declaration. So that while all parties share in its glories, the responsibilities, whatever they may be, must also fall upon all of us equally. One of the attendant responsibilities was the situation entailed upon us by the cession of the Philippine Islands.

These islands were ceded to us by the treaty, and that treaty was ratified by the votes of both political parties in the Senate of the United States. This House followed up the treaty by an appropriation of $20,000,000 for the purchase of the Spanish Government's property upon the islands. The money that was contracted for in that treaty was appropriated by both Houses of Congress, and the responsibility of completing that transaction was shared by all parties in the House of Representatives with its coordinate body, the Senate of the United States.

So that, whatever we may think about the proposition now as to the wisdom of capturing the islands, of the wisdom of making a treaty binding ourselves to carry out certain treaty obligations for at least ten years with the Spanish Government; whatever we may think now about the propriety of appropriating the money to carry out those agreements, that has been done, and we are in the same boat, gentlemen of the Democratic party, and although a Republican pilot is at the helm you have no excuse for rocking the boat. [Laughter.] That seems to be about all that has been done by the opposition in all this struggle.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield for a question?

Mr. LACEY. I will.

Mr. SNODGRASS. As the gentleman is discussing this treaty, I would be glad if he would devote his attention to what he believes to be the effect of the reservation in the treaty which gave to Congress the power to determine the civil and political status of the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands, and whether or not under that reservation we did not have power after the enactment of the treaty to give these people independence.

Mr. LACEY. I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that it would be in the power of this Congress to set up a government in those islands and then turn them loose, but we nevertheless have assumed obligations to the Spanish Government in our treaty.

Mr. COCHRAN. What are they?

Mr. LACEY. A ten years' contract, by which they are to have all the rights that we have.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, that has been said a good many times, that we have obligations. If we claim no treaty privileges over there in contravention of the rights of Spain that would end our obligation, would it not?

Mr. LACEY. Perhaps so.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. LACEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I shall have to consume some of this time myself. [Laughter.] However, I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee for one more question.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Does the gentleman believe it is entirely competent for us to secure all the rights of Spain provided for in the treaty, and yet give these people independence by a treaty?

Mr. LACEY. I do not care to discuss that question now. I suggested that with our eyes open we made a ten years' contract, but it is said that we ought to get out of the Philippines as we have got out of Cuba.

Let me call their attention to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that there was no attempt made to kick us out of Cuba. The proposition is a very different one. If Maximo Gomez had called out his troops and had attacked General Shafter or General Wood in the island of Cuba, I will venture to say that we would have been in Cuba to-day, and the proposition, therefore, is entirely a different one in the two localities.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. VANDIVER. Does the gentleman not think the situation would have been very much the same and that Maximo Gomez would have called out his army against us if we had not pledged them their independence?

Mr. LACEY. I think not. There was no reason for the attack upon our lines in front of the city of Manila. That was a cruel and uncalled-for thing, and a thing that ought not to be defended at this late hour by my friend, even under the stress of a supposed political exigency.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LACEY. Yes, I will yield to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is it not true that the collision between the forces in front of Manila resulted from a riot between the picket lines of the two armies, unknown to the commanders of either?

Mr. LACEY. It is the same kind of a riot as occurred in front of our lines at Shiloh. The Confederate Army was advancing and they did not halt when they came to our lines and there was a disturbance, and these men of Aguinaldo's army who had been from almost the immediate outbreak, for days and weeks, in fact, attempting to pass into our lines in the night. They were halted and the shot was fired, and the battle began. Now, that is straw that has been thrashed over so many times that I do not care to weary the patience of the committee long upon it.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will ask the gentleman if he wishes to go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with the statement as a fact that there was a general advance or any other kind of advance?

Mr. LACEY. I want to be understood fairly that we had drawn our troops up in line, and instructed Aguinaldo to keep his men out of Manila. There was a desire upon the part of the soldiers under Aguinaldo to loot that city. They were determined to do that. They were ordered to keep out; and Aguinaldo's men threw up fortifications, rifle pits, and trenches in front of our men. What did they do that for, if they were our allies and friends?

Mr. COCHRAN. Answer my question.

Mr. LACEY. Why did they advance in the night and refuse to halt, if they were friendly? Why was the firing general along the line if there was no occasion for that? Now, Mr. Chairman, the difficulty was this: Aguinaldo was landed in that island by our authorities; there is no question about that. He rallied around him his old troops and many new ones, and he soon after assumed the right to organize a government and take possession of the fruits of our victory in that island and in the whole archipelago, and attempted to organize a government of his own, and the story is a long one and has been told so often, and I do not care now to repeat it. I know the gentleman from Missouri who has interrupted me, and whom I see upon his feet again, has taken the position that our troops have been cruel, brutal, and inhuman, and that Aguinaldo and his forces had the right of this matter all the time.

Mr. COCHRAN. I would like to know what syllable I ever said to that effect. I challenge the truth of that statement, and defy the gentleman to show a word that I have ever uttered here or elsewhere to that effect.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the gentleman, and if I am not justified——

Mr. COCHRAN. Name the time or admit that you have not told the truth, one or the other.

Mr. LACEY. My friend has been on his feet time and again, and I have been amazed that a gentleman coming from the locality which he does would be so intensely bitter upon the question of the war in the Philippines.

Mr. COCHRAN. Now, name some word of mine to justify that, or I brand the statement as absolutely and deliberately false.

Mr. LACEY. If the gentleman says that is false, I will have to take his word for it. As I understand the gentleman now, if he has ever made the charge that there has been cruelty upon the part of the United States troops, he did not wish to be so understood.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have never made a public utterance on the subject.

Mr. LACEY. If he has been understood to have asserted that the Filipinos on the other side have been gentle and kind, and that nothing on their part has justified a war upon our part, then, I understand it, he has been misunderstood?

Mr. COCHRAN. I have put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the official documents bearing upon every phase of the controversy the gentleman has referred to, and they refute every single syllable he has uttered here to-night—every syllable.

Mr. LACEY. I am very glad to have given the gentleman the opportunity now to put himself in the position of assuming that we are right over there, and that the other side have been wrong.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will ask the gentleman now, coming back to the question, if he desires to go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as stating as a fact that the collision between the forces of the Filipinos and our forces at Manila resulted from an advance made by the Filipino forces?

Mr. LACEY. Do you wish now——

Mr. COCHRAN. Will you answer that question?

Mr. LACEY. I will ask if the gentleman wishes to withdraw his statement made by him time and again that the battle was brought on by our forces?

Mr. COCHRAN. I have never said so, and I want to state a truth to the gentleman. Probably it will be a pleasure to him to know one item of truth about this matter, because it may be handy for him to use at some time.

Mr. LACEY. I would be glad to get it from such a source.

Mr. COCHRAN. The fact is, that after that collision—and I think the gentleman knows it—Aguinaldo sent one of his commissioned officers through the lines to state to General Otis, as he did, that he regretted the collision, that it was without his authority; that he deplored it and did not want it to go any further; that he did not want to get into any further conflict with the Federal forces, and offered to remove his forces further from Manila; and General Otis said to him that this conflict having taken place, it must now go on to the bitter end. That is the history of it, which can be proved by public documents.

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have heard the gentleman a great many times upon this Philippine question. Sometimes I have thought he discussed it out of season. I know he has never missed an opportunity to discuss it in season. If he has spoken less than 25 times upon this question I have perhaps made a mistake in the count. I have always had the misfortune—and it is my misfortune, he assures me now—to have misunderstood him. I have misunderstood him as claiming that we were to blame. I have misunderstood him as claiming that the Filipinos were in the right. It appears that he has been misunderstood, and I am glad to have him take that position now, upon the threshhold of a great political campaign. We have had war there; and war in the Philippine Islands is something like a war in Missouri.

I will avail myself of the privilege of extension of remarks in the RECORD to quote from the RECORD some of the statements of the gentleman on the question, and I think when he reads them he will probably regret the enthusiasm and inaccuracy of his denial. He has spoken so often and with so much heat upon this, his favorite topic, that it is not to be wondered at that he has forgotten what he has said, and it is natural that he is shocked when he hears his assertions repeated and feels impelled to deny them. I will quote and print a few selections from the material with which he has so abundantly besprinkled the RECORD. He does not like their sound when he hears them from other lips.

[Mr. COCHRAN, May 16, 1902, RECORD, p. 5348.]

And it is not true that that single chapter of the history of the war has been creditable to the forces of the United States. The censorship imposed by the commanding general was for the purpose of excluding from the American public the knowledge of what we have been doing over there. From the beginning cities were burned, towns were burned, and the destruction of property was the chief aim of our forces.

* * * * * * *

It is the old theory of conquest—the old story of murder and not of war.

* * * * * * *

I say that our soldiers have done these things in obedience to the orders of men who bear commissions as generals of our forces.

[Mr. COCHRAN, April 2, 1902, RECORD, p. 2811.]

We are not benefiting the Filipinos; we are killing them by hundreds.

[Mr. COCHRAN, RECORD, p. 3523.]

So hereafter when we speak of peace in the Philippine Islands let us say not that the people over there are "pacified," but that they have been terrorized into submission.

[Mr. COCHRAN, January 23, 1902, RECORD, p. 934.]

The Tagalo is docile, honest, peace-loving, and deserving of all consideration.

[Mr. COCHRAN, January 30, 1902, RECORD, p. 1128.]

Weyler, "the butcher," the Spanish general whose brutal disregard of the rules of civilized warfare so horrified American sympathizers in Cuba a few years ago, will go into history in very respectable company.

* * * * * * *

Precisely the policy of Weyler is being practiced * * * by our generals in the Philippine Islands.

[Mr. COCHRAN, January 30, 1902, RECORD, p. 1129.]

But, sir, this war is wrong. The methods that are being used are disgraceful to our arms and our flag.

Mr. COCHRAN. Do I understand you to say that war has been in progress in the Philippine Islands? If so, who declared war there? I thought it was a riot, or an insurrection.

Mr. LACEY. Now the gentleman is exceedingly technical. If this had occurred in Missouri, I should call it a war, and I have some very unpleasant recollections of a war that was waged in Missouri. And I want now to call the gentleman's attention to a little chapter out of the record of that war, and want to show how readily men may make——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I ask the gentleman a question right there?

Mr. LACEY. Not now. I want to show how readily men may make orders in a war that on their face are unjustified and unjustifiable.

I will read now from an order issued by General Frémont, applying to and covering the part of Missouri that the gentleman's district lies in, an order issued in August, 1861. And this was not like Gen. Jacob Smith's order, a verbal one, given in hot blood to his subalterns while in the field and smarting under repeated outrages, but a written order issued from headquarters of a great department. In that order he declared that—

The lines of army occupation in the State of Missouri for the present are declared to extend from Leavenworth, by way of the posts of Jefferson City, Rolla, and Ironton, to Cape Girardeau on the Mississippi River; and all persons who shall be taken with arms within their hands within these lines shall be tried by court-martial, and if found guilty shall be shot.

Now, there was a declaration made by a civilized commander in a civilized war, and I am very much gratified to be able to say that that order after it was issued was never carried out, because I have a very painful recollection that in a few days after that order was issued, and while it was still in force, I happened to be captured by the Confederates with arms in my hands, within the same identical territory in which General Fremont had ordered all rebels captured to be tried by court-martial and shot. I need not say that I cordially disapproved of that order. The first time I heard it read I heard it read by the guards around the camp fire with Price's army, and it made an impression upon my mind that I shall never forget. The guards took occasion to read it frequently to the prisoners, and soon after 4,000 of Mulligan's men were captured at Lexington and were available as hostages against the carrying out of General Fremont's cruel order.

Now, that order was not carried out. Abraham Lincoln did precisely what Theodore Roosevelt did. As soon as he heard of that order, Mr. Lincoln revoked it, just as Mr. Roosevelt ordered Gen. Jacob Smith to be court-martialed and tried, to determine whether or not he had issued such orders as have been charged against him in the conduct of the war in the Philippines.

Mr. COCHRAN rose.

Mr. LACEY. I can not yield at present.

Mr. COCHRAN. I should like to ask just one question while you are on that.

Mr. LACEY. Very well.

Mr. COCHRAN. Has the gentleman any knowledge of any order that was ever issued by a general of the Army, or was any order issued by officers on either side directing the soldiers to kill unarmed noncombatants and kill children 10 years of age?

Mr. LACEY. Nor do I believe that such an order was issued in the Philippines.

Mr. COCHRAN. General Smith admits it.

Mr. LACEY. And whether it is true or not I do not know, but——

Mr. COCHRAN. Did the gentleman ever hear during the civil war of any officer issuing an order to kill noncombatants on either side—killed by the regular troops on either side upon any pretense whatever?

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I remember very distinctly that a command was raised in my friend's own district, and that the command of Quantrell passed over into the State of Kansas and burned Lawrence and shot down all the men, armed and unarmed, who were there.

Mr. COCHRAN. Have you ever heard of an order being issued by a commissioned officer commanding any force, other than Quantrell, either Confederate or Federal, directing that the soldiers should kill unarmed noncombatants?

Mr. LACEY. I think I answered when I told the gentleman I knew of no such order nor did I believe that such an order was issued by General Smith. I shall not believe it until I see the proof, and hope that General Smith's orders have been misunderstood.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will permit me, I think that the gentleman from Missouri assumes a fact which has no existence except in his own imagination. I never have heard authoritatively the charge that any officer anywhere in the service of the United States ever ordered the killing of unarmed noncombatants, and never heard that was charged against General Smith.

Mr. COCHRAN. I say General Smith admits that.

Mr. LACEY. I happen to have before me here in the Manila American, something that, perhaps, ought to go into the RECORD in regard to General Smith. Now, I am not here to defend General Smith, and the gentleman does not appear here to defend General Quantrell, notwithstanding the fact that Quantrell reunions have been held in his district. They held in the town of Lee Summit a reunion, and I understand that they are now regarded as reputable citizens.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is the gentleman stating that as a fact within his knowledge?

Mr. LACEY. I am stating it from newspaper accounts.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is as near the truth as the gentleman can state anything on the floor of the House of Representatives.

Mr. LACEY. What are the facts? Perhaps I am mistaken. Is Lee Summit in your district?

Mr. COCHRAN. Your geography is nearly as bad as your history. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman lives in the St. Joseph district, or in the neighborhood of St. Joseph, in the northwest of Missouri. Quantrell's troops were raised in that part of the country, perhaps not all in his district; but there was a Quantrell reunion at Lee Summit not very long ago, I think a few years ago, and I only speak of that in order to call attention to the fact that cruelty and inhumanity have existed in every war, and will in every war that is yet to come, and that these gentlemen are now struggling to find some cause of complaint against our own soldiers in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is the gentleman citing the career of Quantrell as a warrant for the career of Smith?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. I am giving the gentleman a sample. I want to ask the gentleman whether Quantrell made such an order?

Mr. COCHRAN. I admit that there is a precedent for Smith's order in the conduct of Quantrell, and unless the Republican side of this House justifies Quantrell why do you quote it as a precedent for the action of Smith? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman seems to be anxious to put an imputation upon General Smith, and he seems to forget that the record of General Smith is not here. A soldier over there sent me a paper——

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I think the gentleman is mistaken in saying that the record is not here.

Mr. LACEY. The record, I am told, is now in the hands of the President.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is the same thing.

Mr. COCHRAN. Like everything else, it is hidden.

Mr. LACEY. It is not a document yet made public giving General Smith's version of this case. I hold in my hand a speech made by Colonel Woodruff, who defended him before the court-martial in which he was tried.

It was reported in shorthand and published at Manila. A garbled extract or report of that speech has been the basis of most of the outcry against the alleged misconduct of General Smith. I am not willing to indorse cruelty by our troops in this or in any other war, nor am I ready, on vague newspaper reports, to accept as true charges which assail the honor of our Army who, under the Tropic sun, are upholding our flag in these far distant islands.

Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, did as Mr. Lincoln did in 1861. Mr. Lincoln condemned the Fremont order and President Roosevelt condemned the order of General Smith as so reported to him, and it seems to have been assumed as a matter of course that General Smith had issued an order to kill everybody in Samar over 10 years of age. I am going to read part of this address, not in vindication of General Smith, because he will have to stand or fall by the proceedings of the court-martial when the same is made public, but we have assaults made upon him based wholly upon vague newspaper accounts, without his side being heard. I apprehend that the statement of his version of this is fairly set out by his counsel in that trial, as I understand it. The charge made against General Smith is that his counsel, Colonel Woodruff, admitted in his defense that these orders had been issued.

Now, let me read the language of Colonel Woodruff, from a stenographic report published in the Manila American of May 14, 1902:

> And now we turn from the law to the accused, who has ever acted in accordance with the law and now claims its protection. The records in the Adjutant-General's Office in Washington will show that he was enrolled as a private soldier April 28, 1861; first mustered into the Second Kentucky Infantry in the three months' service as first lieutenant, May 8, 1861; mustered into three years' service June 4, 1861, as first lieutenant, Second Kentucky Volunteers; captain of same regiment on January 28, 1862; captain, Thirteenth Infantry, March 7, 1867; major, November 26, 1894; lieutenant-colonel, June 30, 1898; colonel, United States Army, October 20, 1899; brigadier-general of volunteers, June 1, 1900; brigadier-general, United States Army, March 30, 1901.
> The record at Washington will show that he was wounded while commanding his company, by a saber cut on the head, at Mud River crossing, near Barboursville, W. Va., and received a shotgun wound in the shoulder on the same occasion; served in most of the engagements in West Virginia between July, 1861, and January, 1862. At Shiloh his thigh was shattered, and he was brevetted major for gallant conduct on that occasion. His wound finally compelled him to relinquish active field service. Then came thirty years of that varied frontier service so well known to you, gentlemen of the court, serving from Montana to Texas in that grand advance guard of protecting our settlers and suppressing lawlessness that has done so much for the development of our country from the Alleghenies to the Pacific

We must make due allowance for the zeal of the advocate, but we should have both sides. Colonel Woodruff proceeds:

* * * * * * *

> He was wounded in the assault upon San Juan Hill, and now carries a Mauser bullet in his body. He has served in these islands for three years, and his activity, pluck, and energy are known to all men living in the Philippine Islands.
> For forty-one years he has worn the uniform of the United States Army with honor to himself and with benefit to the flag under which he has fought and bled. And now he has, at the close of a most remarkable and successful campaign, during which he has accomplished that which Spain in her three hundred years' occupancy never achieved, the pacification of Samar—while returning to his family and his native land after three years' service here, covered, as he and all those who knew him thought, with honor and glory, he is halted, taken off the transport to face charges for the language he used in giving instructions for the conduct of a most successful campaign. We feel that the Government has only done this in deference to an overwhelming or noisy public sentiment in the United States, based upon rumors fostered for some unknown, and, I believe, ignoble purposes, until hysteria has been produced, and this gray-haired, wounded, victorious general is exposed to the indignity of a court-martial in deference to that hysterical public opinion.
> We have not deemed it compatible with the dignity of a general officer of the United States Army to take the witness stand to explain to his peers his words when instructing his subordinate officers how to crush the outlaws, or to make clear to them actions committed in compliance with the law and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.
> If anyone can read the modest story of Sergeant Mumby without a welling up in his heart of pride in the enlisted man of the United States Army, he is unworthy of the name of American. We can see that heroic band, fighting with naked hand, base ball bats, bread and butcher knives, stabbed in the back and breast, knocked down, piled up, still fighting on; then their thoughtfulness in trying to destroy everything of value to those murderers; then their kind care of their sorely wounded comrades; then their return to the rescue, and what they saw. Their loved captain, who had knelt at the same altar with his murderers, cut, slashed, and burned; their young lieutenant, a fire kindled around him, his leg nearly cut off, his head split open, and in mere barbarous wantonness the gaping wound filled with blackberry jam; comrades with their bodies mangled and defiled.
> If there is an American who can look upon the spectacle of 46 murdered Americans, stripped of their uniforms which they had worn with honor to their country and to the benefit of the Philippine Islands, with their hacked and gashed bodies, defiled as savages and barbarians can defile them; I say if there is an American who can look upon American soldiers, butchered and defiled as they were, and not feel that action, prompt, drastic, and effective, was imperative, then he is destitute of those elements of manhood that go to make up the true American. You have had described to you the pitfalls and spring guns which the natives so plentifully strew along the pathway our soldiers have to travel. You have been told how their commanding officer, their commanding general, directed them to set plenty of poison traps, and gave them the receipt for the poison, also the antidotes in case any of them should be hurt themselves.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman if Major Waller was not acquitted specifically on the ground that his conduct was under direct orders from General Smith. Is not that the record?

Mr. LACEY. It is so reported, as I understand.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The record shows that he was acquitted because he obeyed the orders of General Smith.

Mr. LACEY. Now I read further from Colonel Woodruff:

> You gentlemen know the awful strain of waiting for an expected onslaught and the result in victory or death and mutilation. If the trail will permit of two abreast, they go, one with bayonet to the right, the other with bayonet to the left; if in single file, No. 1 with bayonet to the right, No. 2 with bayonet to the left. No advance guard or flankers can be sent out. It would be a vain precaution, expecting at every moment to receive the rush, and the only thing that worried these men was that they might be jumped when it was impossible for them to rally back to back. They did not cringe from a frontal attack, but every time met death with death where death was rife.

That is the description by Colonel Woodruff of the surrounding circumstances under which it is alleged verbal instructions were given by General Smith that have been so severely criticised. I am not here justifying them. I am not here to defend them; but General Smith is entitled to have the explanation given with the admission that orders of slaughter were given.

Now, the gentleman does not defend Quantrell, but there were men who did. We have heard in this debate of the burning of Chambersburg and Atlanta. We have had again in this debate the dreadful story of the civil war. That was an uncivil war. That was a war where cruelty existed just the same as it does in all wars. The most civilized people on the planet fought hand to hand and were cruel, as all men will be cruel in war. In the checkerboard of war half the spots are black.

I will ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] if he will add one more speech to this Philippine discussion? I will ask him when he takes his feet again to speak upon that subject, and say whether or not he would be very severe upon the officers and men who retaliate for these cruelties that have been described in the speech of Colonel Woodruff with retaliation. We have, it is true, been having a war in the Philippines, whether we call it a war or an insurrection. The revolt is being put down. It has almost wholly disappeared.

The number of our troops is rapidly being reduced, and we are face to face with the proposition of doing something for civil government in those islands. Shall we continue the military government or provide some method of civil government there? The Republican members of the committee have reported a bill to give a legislative body to the Philippine Islanders to enact their own laws. They have endeavored by this bill to extend to them the utmost civil authority which it is possible under existing circumstances to give them. Why should gentlemen on the other side, who are opposed to military government, have so much to say about cruelty? Why are they opposed to this bill? Why not extend these civil rights to the Philippine Islands as rapidly as circumstances will permit?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will my friend yield a moment?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You speak of giving certain civil rights to the Filipinos. What objections have you to giving Americans who are living in the Philippine Islands, who may live there as long as they do live, the right to be tried by jury as over here? Why do you deny the American citizens that right over there and why do you deny the Filipinos that right?

Mr. LACEY. Trial by a jury of Filipinos? I fear the Americans would not appreciate that as a privilege.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can you not have an American jury? You have American judges, and you contend we hold them without or beyond the limitations of the Constitution.

Mr. LACEY. That is a very interesting proposition.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of course it is.

Mr. LACEY. With the little handful of Americans that are there now, the gentleman intends to turn them over to the tender mercies of a Filipino jury. I do not know what the result——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But you say we operate outside of the Constitution over there.

Mr. LACEY. I think it would be a hard row for an American to hoe.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will grant you that you do not want to be turned over to the Filipinos, but still there is a chief justice who is a Filipino, and there are other Filipinos on the supreme bench—three, all told. Can you not get an American jury to try Americans and Filipinos to try the Filipinos under your party's construction of the law?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LACEY. I have yielded to the gentleman's speech.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I would like to have you answer it.

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, the right of trial by jury and the trial of cases by jury is the very first training in Anglo-Saxon system of ordinary civil government. Every man who goes to the county seat of any county and takes a part as a juryman there and listens to the trial of cases and hears the instructions of the court and the arguments of counsel takes upon himself the solemn duty of acting as a judge between man and man and is fitting himself for the high duties of self-government. It has taken a long time for the Anglo-Saxon race to grow up to the full stature of jury management.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We have had jury rights for over a century.

Mr. LACEY. It is a very difficult thing, and it takes time. I heard the trial of a case not long ago in New Mexico, and there I saw a jury composed entirely of Mexicans, not one of whom could speak a word of English. The case was being tried in English, and the speeches had to be made in English and then translated sentence by sentence into the language of the jurymen as the trial progressed. I noticed the trial was between an Indian and a white man. I did not have to look at the paper the next morning to find out that the white man lost his case. It was quite evident how it would go.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did not the gentleman appeal?

Mr. LACEY. I never followed the case any further.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did he not have the right to appeal?

Mr. LACEY. He had, but I know he had very little chance with that jury.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We have Federal judges out there. The judge could set aside the verdict and keep setting it aside if wrong.

Mr. LACEY. I am speaking of adapting the trial by jury to new races who are entirely unfamiliar with it. It takes time and patience.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Could you not have American juries in the Philippine Islands to try our people there? They are still American citizens.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope it will be extended so as to permit the gentleman to answer that very fundamental proposition. The gentleman is always courteous about interruptions. Our forefathers answered the question about a century ago.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. LACEY. I decline to be interrupted for those few minutes, Mr. Chairman, because I want to speak directly about the bill.

This bill has in it beneficial provisions. We have had seven or eight days' discussion, and with a very small exception that discussion has not been devoted to the details or provisions of this bill, either to perfecting the bill or to show where it was imperfect. The general Philippine question has been discussed. This bill provides a system of civil government. It provides an expanding system, a system of government which will grow, and out of which ultimately jury trial and all of the rights the people of those islands are fitted for shall be accorded to them.

This is the first step, and why gentlemen who are opposed to martial law should insist that there should be no bill creating civil law there is more than I can understand. We have the substitute that is offered by the minority, and that is a proposition to these men that if they will yield to us the control of the islands we will directly afterwards turn it back to them. If that is the best thing we can do in this proposed legislation, we may as well turn the islands over to them to begin with, without calling upon them to lay down their arms and to yield to our protectorate or our control. This bill provides a system of land, forestry, and mineral laws, adapting the laws of that country as far as possible to those that have been found beneficial in this country.

All of these various matters have been worked out by the Insular Committee with infinite care, and there is the dawn of a better day for the Philippine Islands. The worst enemy that the Philippine Islands can have is he who, upon the floor of the House of Representatives or in the Senate Chamber, urges them to continue this strife, to continue their resistance to the armed forces of the United States of America; and, Mr. Chairman, I believe that in a very few years from the passage of this law we will have an entirely new condition of things in those islands.

The purposes involved in this bill have been very vaguely discussed. But little attention has been given to its details in the debate upon this floor. The purpose of the measure is to set up a civil government in the Philippines. Those who denounce "imperialism" ought to be the first to favor the substitution of a civil for a military government. This question should not be a partisan one—and especially is this true in the light of the history of recent events.

In 1898 the Democracy were much more anxious for a war with Spain than the Republicans. Day by day they sought to force Congress to the consideration of a resolution of intervention in the affairs of Cuba. Mr. McKinley and Speaker Reed were of one accord in their desire to avoid war, and they were both exposed to the severest criticism of those who could not wait, or thought they could not wait, for war to begin. The explosion of the Maine, however, made war inevitable, and all parties joined in voting men and supplies and all parties united in furnishing men for the contest. Union soldiers and their sons, Confederate soldiers and their sons united to make the war with Spain short, sharp, and decisive. The history of that war was brief and glorious, but short as it was its consequences are very far-reaching.

The treaty of peace was negotiated by a Commission composed of members of both the great political parties. That treaty provided for the cession of about fourteen hundred islands in the Pacific to the United States; that treaty was ratified by the votes of both Republicans and Democrats in the Senate. Colonel Bryan came from Florida to urge upon his Democratic supporters the ratification of the treaty. But the responsibility did not rest with the President, the Senate, and Mr. Bryan; the House was called upon to make an appropriation of $20,000,000 to carry out the terms of that treaty and pay for the Spanish Government's property in Porto Rico and the Philippines.

So we have, without regard to party, taken up the burden of the government of those islands, and a Commission to prepare a civil government has been selected, composed of both Republicans and Democrats, who have been giving their best efforts to devise and install a liberal, free government for the 84 tribes who inhabit those islands. This problem fell to our lot as one of the fruits of the Spanish war, and we can not now lay it down, if we should desire to do so. We have incurred treaty obligations and responsibilities to mankind as the result of that war that can not be lightly shaken off.

Our political opponents, at the threshold of a Congressional campaign and with a Presidential election only two years away, are attempting to create political capital out of the difficulties with which the nation has become surrounded—difficulties which are as much of their creation as they are of the party in power. They tell us now we "should have sailed away from the Philippines" as soon as the Spanish fleet was sunk; but none of them thought so at that time, nor did any of them say so at that time. They were with us then; they should be content to stay with us now. The glory of the war they shared with us, they should be content to bear its burdens and consequences now.

Nor do I believe that the great patriotic masses of the Democratic party will approve of the plan of campaign now outlined by their leaders in this discussion.

The taking of the islands was not of our seeking. They came to us as the fruits of war. We did not desire them. If, six years ago, Spain had sent a minister to Washington and offered us Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands free and $20,000,000 as a bonus if we would take them, there would not have been a man found in either the House or Senate to favor the proposition. But when we found ourselves in possession of that archipelago as the fruits of war, when the attempt was made to drive our soldiers from the soil hallowed by their blood, to compel the hauling down of the flag, then, Mr. Chairman, they struck the Anglo-Saxon American in his tender point.

We took the flag away from Cuba, but it was not driven off of Cuba. We took it from the Castle of Chapultepec, but it was hauled down of our own volition. We took it out of the harbor of Tripoli, but we did it because we wanted to, and it has never been driven from any place on the face of the earth, and never will be. [Applause.] And, Mr. Chairman, the flag will stay there as long as we want it to stay. If it becomes to the interest of the islands and to our interest to withdraw after having set them up in business, it will be time enough to talk about it; but the people of the United States will not trifle with an enemy with arms in their hands and who are meeting us with hostile intent.

And I commend to my Democratic friends upon the other side of this Chamber that they study the disposition of the American people. There never has been a time in our history that a party known as a "peace party" has risen to oppose the carrying of our purposes to a successful result in time of war that that party has not suffered defeat at the polls for its conduct. And the alliance to-day with our Philippine foes, the upholding of their arms in the Philippines upon the floor of this House, will be found to be a political mistake. American people to-day are as one.

This is no longer a divided country. Spain found that out to her sorrow in 1898. And, my Democratic friends, the thing for you to do is to swing into line to help us to carry this contest to the only end that the American people will accept. Give good cheer to our national pilot while he is in the breakers.

Let us continue to the end as we were in 1898—one people, united, with one purpose and with only one flag, and with only one object in view, the upholding of the honor and glory of the American Union. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCDERMOTT].

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, for over a month England has been celebrating the sort of victory that the United States is seeking to obtain. Thankful prayers have been offered up in Westminster, and the same ethereal wave that conducted these offerings to the throne of Divine Providence carried the sickening effluvium of London gin, mingled with the stench of the putrid bodies that fill the ditches of South Africa. England has been celebrating the conquest of the Boers. May it not be that to-night Oom Paul, turning his tearful eyes heavenward, can read in the electric tracery of the clouds that overhang London town the legend:

Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord.

For the policy of the Republican party in dealing with the Philippines several excuses have been advanced, but they are, each and every one, demurrable. We are informed that this country is on a mission—on a mission, as I recall the words of one of the speakers on the other side of the House, directed by the Christian God. The documents so far in evidence fail to support the assertion. History shows that whenever ambition or greed have led the way to conquering slaughter, the gentleman in command has been most positive in his assurances that he was invading the chosen territory in obedience to Divine commandment. Sentence a murderer to be hanged, and he will pray for mercy. Crown him, and he will insist that he is in partnership with God.

There are many Republicans in this country who hesitate to remain in a party that is smeared with the blood of innocents. To them is given the comforting assurance that the interests of Christianity are being advanced by the sword. The bill under consideration gives evidence of the "mission." It has a section providing that the right of suffrage shall be denied to "non-Christian" tribes. One branch of the Philippine legislature is to be appointed by the President; the other is to be elected by the people whenever the President is satisfied that "a condition of general and complete peace shall have been established;" but "non-Christian tribes" are not to participate in the election. An island must be inhabited by a Christian tribe before it is entitled to representation in the government.

War and religion are to form a partnership, and this under a Constitution declaring that "no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office of public trust under the United States." But this will please some people, and afford citation in evidence of the "mission." Why not go a step further? If you are going to make a belief in Christianity a qualification for the suffrage, why not tell the "non-Christian tribes" just what form of Christianity they should believe in? Why not enact that form as part of the government? Why not get together and have a consensus of opinion on that side of the House as to just what the true religion is and then amend the bill to include the discovery? Why not provide that a man shall not vote unless he is a Presbyterian? It will never do to let a tribe vote just because they declare that they are Christians. Start them correctly. Think what would happen if they were converted to the Jewish faith! Then they would continue "non-Christians."

Think, my friends, what a burden you are placing upon Filipino ambition! Think and pause! Do not, I pray you, require the Filipino to correctly settle the question of the eternal damnation of infants in order that he may become a member of the common council of his native town. [Laughter.] Gentlemen of the majority, you can not shield imperialism by pretending that you are engaged in a modern crusade for the propagation of Christianity. If you really want to Christianize the Moros or other infidel tribes, treat them as William Penn treated the Indians. Stop baptizing mothers in the blood of their infants.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. With pleasure.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The phraseology of the bill does not bear out the interpretation the gentleman has given it.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. If one of the tribes should vacate an island and that island should be populated by Jews, or if one of the tribes should be converted to Judaism, would those Jews or the converts be entitled to vote under this bill?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will tell the gentleman this: The language of the bill, line 19, page 63, is:

Not inhabited by Moros or other non-Christian tribes.

I will answer that question to the satisfaction of the gentleman as a lawyer. I will say in the beginning that there is in that nothing further from the intention of the Insular Affairs Committee than to proscribe the Jews.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Then why do you do it?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We do not do it. Line 19 says:

Part of the island not inhabited by the Moros or other non-Christian tribes.

Now, then, a Moro is a Mohammedan; they live there in tribal relations——

Mr. MCDERMOTT. If the gentleman will have my time extended, I will give him all the opportunity he wants.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to ask the gentleman if the rule of statutory construction is not this, that where there is a specific mention, as there is here, of territory not inhabited by the Moros or other non-Christian tribes, the word "other" includes tribes similar to the Moros and nobody else?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I do not admit any such construction of the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is the ordinary rule of law.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. It may be; and there is another ordinary rule of law that when you say "non-Christian" in a statute you excluded Jews, because they are non-Christian.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Non-Christian tribes.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Oh, they would be a tribe if there were enough of them.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Jews are not a tribe. [Laughter.]

Mr. MCDERMOTT. You can not tell anything about that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I know I have never seen Jews in tribes.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. But the gentleman forgets that there are some lost tribes of the Jews, and you can not tell where they will turn up. [Prolonged laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, the gentleman did manage to get out of it.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. You are getting all the other valuable things in the Philippine Islands, and you may unearth those tribes. No man can tell what you will discover over there. My argument is that the word "non-Christian" was put in to please those who believe that religion should be propagated at the end of the bayonet. That is my proposition.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman has not read Mr. Bryan's statement in this morning's paper. He says they are trying to dictate the policy of the gentleman's party.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I have never agreed with Mr. Bryan on his financial policy, and I believe that if that financial policy had been eliminated from the Democratic platform of 1900 Mr. Bryan would have been elected President of this country. I do not know what he has said in his paper or what he has not said. I have an admiration for him in some ways, but I do not join him in others.

Mr. OLMSTED. I hope you will run him again on the imperialism platform.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. That is a long way ahead. We will probably pursue the even tenor of our way without paying overdue regard to your hopes, and probably we will do away with your hopes. [Laughter.] The non-Christian Filipino must throw away his clout, wear breeches and a necktie, and give up his dreams of a future in which he now hopes to have a dozen wives and free rum. There is nothing like giving them interesting propositions on that side of the Pacific. Partial home rule is to depend on an aggregated religious belief.

It is to be noted that "non-Christian" Filipinos are to be excluded from self-government because they are "non-Christian" and not because they are in rebellion. The proposition is obnoxious to the letter and spirit of our Constitution, and the American people will not be deceived by it. The corner stone of imperialism is not and never can be Christianity. Its pedestal is tyranny and its god is greed.

Mr. Chairman, for weeks the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has been filled with discussions of whether our soldiers have been as brutal as those whom they are fighting. On this question we have been favored with no end of letters, no end of charges and countercharges. The truth probably is that both sides have been brutal.

What do men go to war for except to be brutal? If a man is trying to kill me, I am going to kill him first, if I can, and I am not going to be very particular about the way in which I kill him. Our soldiers did not go to the Philippine Islands to feed the natives on chocolate éclairs. They went over there to kill them and to keep up the killing until they laid down their arms. They were sent there to kill, and for one I am not much disposed to fuss a great deal about the way in which they do the killing. Whatever killing is necessary in the Philippine Islands under your policy or ours should be promptly attended to; and if a few bayonets are jabbed into the entrails of infants, if some men are tortured and some women ravished, why, that is war. If you are really on a "mission" and Divine Providence is not satisfied with the way in which the orders are being carried out, Divine Providence can ring down the curtain and stop the play. The issue is not how we are fighting, but what we are fighting for.

In the early part of this debate he said that we had erected schoolhouses, I think $600,000 worth of them. That is a beautiful picture. We have spent $180,000,000 so far, and we will spend two or three hundred million dollars more before we get through, but the picture is beautiful. I see those little Filipino children, straight haired or curly haired according to their ancestry, trotting along, boy and girl, hand in hand, on the country road, to the old red schoolhouse, that beautiful ideal of New England creation.

As we look upon the picture we marvel at the depth and breadth of our greatness and our charity. But let us not forget that there are uneducated children in this country working by night and by day in factories and mines. There are women in this country who work night and day with needle and thread. There are thousands of ambitious American boys wondering why they were placed in this world without a chance to attain educational equality; and I ask you on that side, Do you not think God would have been just as well pleased if you had spent the $170,000,000 in educating American boys instead of Filipino children? [Applause on the Democratic side.] But I do not believe that there is really any care in the mind of any gentleman on the other side about elevating the Filipino people. Let me give you this as a test: Have any of you gentlemen ever thought how a Filipino looked? Have you ever really thought how a Filipino family lives? Have you ever really thought what his duties were on earth or what his chance of progress? Probably not one of you.

You have taken up a bad policy, and, thinking that the words "flag" and "religion" would cover almost everything, you are crying the greed, grasp, spoils propositions that are at the root of your imperial policy, and you would distract attention by shouting of your "mission" and declaring that "where the flag is it shall 'stay put.'" That sort of thing may appeal to the mob. That manner of argument may appeal to an audience in a political debate. Does it appeal to sense? Does it appeal to reason? Is it really the mission of this Republic to elevate Asiatic savages? If it is, where and when will the "mission" end? Are we so prosperous at home that we were justified during the last year in putting a tax of $3 upon every man, woman, and child in these United States for the purpose of elevating Filipinos?

The Republican party is not on any Christianizing mission whatever. I believe that party intends to treat the savages of those islands in the same way that the people who came here after the discovery of America treated the American Indians. I believe that if we are to hold those islands, we are going to treat the Moros just the same as we treated the American Indians. And I want to say that if we are going to hold the islands, this result must follow from an inexorable law. Survival of the fittest is in governmental propositions a rule as forceful as it is in nature.

I do not propose to be hypocritical in this matter. I do not pretend, if we are going to permanently hold these islands, that I have any tears to shed about the idea of the extermination of savages there.

IMPERIALISM DEFINED.

The advocates of this bill say that Thomas Jefferson believed in imperialism. He did not. They say that he practiced it. We deny it, and offer the record in evidence. It is just as well to have a clear definition of the issue we are discussing, and I know of no better aid to that definition than is to be found in the latest, but I hope, notwithstanding the author's declaration, not to be the last, book with which this world has been enriched from the pen of Herbert Spencer, and with the permission of the House I will at this point present, from his Facts and Comments, the chapter on imperialism and slavery. He says:

"You shall submit. We are masters and we will make you acknowledge it:" These words express the sentiment which sways the British nation in its dealings with the Boer Republics; and this sentiment it is which, definitely displayed in this case, pervades indefinitely the political feeling now manifesting itself as imperialism. Supremacy, where not clearly imagined, is vaguely present in the background of consciousness. Not the derivation of the word only, but all its uses and associations, imply the thought of predominance—imply a correlative subordination. Actual or potential coercion of others, individuals or communities, is necessarily involved in the conception.

There are those, and unhappily they form the great majority, who think there is something noble (morally as well as historically) in the exercise of command—in the forcing of others to abandon their own wills and fulfill the will of the commander. I am not about to contest this sentiment. I merely say that there are others, unhappily but few, who think it ignoble to bring their fellow creatures into subjection, and who think the noble thing is not only to respect their freedom but also to defend it. Leaving this matter undiscussed, my present purpose is to show those who lean toward imperialism that the exercise of mastery inevitably entails on the master himself some form of slavery, more or less pronounced. The uncultured masses, and even the greater part of the cultured, will regard this statement as absurd; and though many who have read history with an eye to essentials rather than trivialities know that this is a paradox in the right sense—that is, true in fact though not seeming true—even they are not fully conscious of the mass of evidence establishing it, and will be all the better for having illustrations recalled. Let me begin with the earliest and simplest, which well serves to symbolize the whole.

Here is a prisoner with hands tied and a cord round his neck (as suggested by figures in Assyrian bas-reliefs) being led home by his savage conqueror, who intends to make him a slave. The one, you say, is captive and the other free. Are you quite sure the other is free? He holds one end of the cord, and unless he means to let his captive escape, he must continue to be fastened by keeping hold of the cord in such way that it can not easily be detached. He must be himself tied to the captive while the captive is tied to him. In other ways his activities are impeded and certain burdens are imposed on him. A wild animal crosses the track and he can not pursue. If he wishes to drink of the adjacent stream, he must tie up his captive lest advantage be taken of his defenseless position. Moreover he has to provide food for both. In various ways, then, he is no longer completely at liberty; and these ways adumbrate in a simple manner the universal truth that the instrumentalities by which the subordination of others is effected, themselves subordinate the victor, the master, or the ruler.

The coincidence in time between the South African war and the recent outburst of imperialism illustrates the general truth that militancy and imperialism are closely allied—are, in fact, different manifestations of the same social condition. It could not, indeed, be otherwise. Subject races, or subject societies, do not voluntarily submit themselves to a ruling race or a ruling society; their subjection is nearly always the effect of coercion. An army is the agency which achieved it, and an army must be kept ever ready to maintain it. Unless the supremacy has actual or potential force behind it there is only federation, not imperialism. Here, however, as above implied, the purpose is not so much to show that an imperial society is necessarily a militant society, as to show that in proportion as liberty is diminished in the societies over which it rules, liberty is diminished within its own organization.

THE EARLIEST RECORDS FURNISH AN ILLUSTRATION.

Whether in the times of the Pyramid builders the power of the Egyptian autocrat which effected such astounding results was qualified by an elaborate system of restraints, we have no evidence, but there is proof that in later days he was the slave of the governmental organization.

"The laws subjected every action of his private life to as severe a scrutiny as his behavior in the administration of affairs. The hours of washing, walking, and all the amusements and occupations of the day were settled with precision, and the quantity as well as the quality of his food were regulated by law." (Manners and Customs of the Ancient Egyptians, Birch's ed. of Wilkinson, Vol. I, 166.)

Moreover, the relation between enslavement of foreign peoples and enslavement of the nation which conquered them is shown by an inscription at Karnak, which describes "how bitterly the country was paying the price of its foreign conquests in its oppression by its standing army." (Flinders Petrie, History of Egypt, ii, 252.)

Turn we now to a society of widely different type, but exhibiting the same general truths—that of Sparta. The conquering race, or Spartans proper, who had beneath them the Perioeci and the Helots, descendants of the two subject races, were not only supreme over these, but twice became the supreme race of the Peloponnesus. What was the price they paid for their "imperial" position? The individual Spartan, master as he was over slaves and semislaves, was himself in bondage to the incorporated society of Spartans. Each led the life not which he himself chose, but the life dictated by the aggregate of which he formed one unit. And this life was a life of strenuous discipline, leaving no space for culture or art or poetry or other source of pleasure. He exemplified in an extreme degree the Grecian doctrine that the citizen does not belong to himself or to his family, but to his city.

If instead of the small and simple community of Sparta we take the vast and complex Empire of Rome, we find this essential connection between imperialism and slavery even more conspicuous. I do not refer to the fact that three-fourths of those who peopled Italy in imperial days were slaves, chained in the fields when at work, chained at night in their dormitories, and those who were porters chained to the doorways—conditions horrible to contemplate—but I refer to the fact that the nominally free part of the community consisted of grades of bondmen. Not only did citizens stand in that bondage implied by military service, complete or partial, under subjection so rigid that an officer was to be dreaded more than an enemy, but those occupied in civil or semicivil life were compelled to work for the public. "Everyone was treated in fact as a servant of the state; * * * the nature of each man's labor was permanently fixed for him."

The society was formed of fighting serfs, working serfs, cultivating serfs, official serfs. And then what of the supreme head of this gigantic bureaucracy into which Roman society had grown—the Emperor? He became a puppet of the Pretorian Guard, which, while a means of safety, was a cause of danger. Moreover, he was in daily bondage to routine. As Gibbon says, "The Emperor was the first slave of the ceremonies he imposed." Thus in a conspicuous manner Rome shows how, as in other cases, a society which enslaves other societies enslaves itself.

The same lesson is taught by those ages of seething confusion, of violence, and bloodshed which the collapse of the Roman Empire left, an empire which dwells in the minds of the many as something to be admired and emulated—the many who forgave any horrors if only their brute love of mastery is gratified, sympathetically when not actually. Passing over those sanguinary times, in which the crimes of Clovis and Fredegonda and Brunehaut were typical, we come in the slow course of things to the emergence of the feudal régime—a régime briefly expressed by the four words, suzerains, vassals, serfs, slaves—a régime which, along with the perpetual struggles for supremacy among local rulers and consequent chronic militancy, was characterized by the unqualified power of each chief or ruler, count, or duke within his own territory—a graduated bondage of all below him.

The established form, "I am your man," uttered by the vassal on his knees with apposed hands, expressed the relation of one grade to another throughout the society; and then, as usual, the master of slaves was himself enslaved by his appliances for maintaining life and power. He had the perpetual burden of arms and coat of mail, and the precautions to be taken now against assassination, now against death by poison. And then when we come to the ultimate state in which the subordination of minor rulers by a chief ruler had become complete, and all counts and dukes were vassals of the king, we have not only the bondage entailed on the king by state business with its unceasing anxieties, but the bondage of ceremonial with its dreary round. Speaking of this in France in the time of Louis le Grand, Madame Maintenon remarks: "Save those only who fill the highest stations, I know of none more unfortunate than those who envy them. If you could only form an idea of what it is!"

Merely referring to the extreme subjection of the ruler to his appliances for ruling which was reached in Japan, where the god-descended Mikado, imprisoned by the requirements of his sacred state, was debarred from ordinary freedoms, and in whose recluse life there were at one time such penalties as sitting for three hours daily on the throne—passing over, too, the case of China, where, as Professor Douglas tells us of the Emperor, "his whole life is one continual round of ceremonial observances," and "from the day on which he ascends the the throne to the time when he is carried to his tomb in the Eastern Hills his hours and almost minutes have special duties appointed to them by the board of rites," we may turn now to the conspicuous example furnished by Russia. Along with that unceasing subjugation of minor nationalities by which its imperialism is displayed, what do we see within its own organization? We have its vast army, to service in which everyone is actually or potentially liable; we have an enormous bureaucracy ramifying everywhere and rigidly controlling individual lives; we have an expenditure ever outrunning resources and calling for loans.

As a result of the pressure felt personally and pecuniarily, we have secret revolutionary societies, perpetual plots, chronic dread of social explosions; and while everyone is in danger of Siberia, we have the all-powerful head of this enslaved nation in constant fear for his life. Even when he goes to review his troops rigorous precautions have to be taken by a supplementary army of soldiers, policemen, and spies, some forming an accompanying guard, some lying in wait here and there to prevent possible attacks, while similar precautions, which from time to time fail, have ever to be taken against assassination by explosion during drives and railway journeys. What portion of life is not absorbed in government business and religious observances is taken up in self-preservation.

And now what is the lesson? Is it that in our own case imperialism and slavery, everywhere else and at all times united, are not to be united? Most will say yes. Nay, they will join, as our poet laureate lately did in the title to some rhymes, the words "imperialism and liberty." Mistaken names for things as of old. Gibbon writes:

"Augustus was sensible that mankind is governed by names; nor was he deceived in his expectation that the senate and people would submit to slavery, provided they were respectfully assured that they still enjoyed their ancient freedom." (Decline and Fall, I, 68.)

"Free!" thinks the Englishman. "How can I be other than free, if by my vote I share in electing a representative who helps to determine the national transactions, home and foreign?" Delivering a ballot paper he identifies with the possession of those unrestrained activities which liberty implies, though, to take but one instance, a threatened penalty every day reminds him that his children must be stamped with the State pattern, not as he wills, but as others will.

But let us note how, along with the nominal extension of constitutional freedom, there has been going on actual diminution of it. There is, first, the fact that the legislative functions of Parliament have been decreasing while the ministry has been usurping them. Important measures are not now brought forward and carried by private members, but appeal is made to the Government to take them up. The making of laws is gradually lapsing into the hands of the executive. And then within the executive itself the tendency is toward placing power in fewer hands. Just as in past times the cabinet grew out of the privy council by a process of restriction, so now a smaller group of ministers is coming to exercise some of the functions of the whole group. Add to which we have subordinate executive bodies, like the home office, the board of trade, the board of education, and the local government board, to which there have been deputed the powers both of making certain kinds of laws and enforcing them—government by administrative order.

In like manner by taking for Government purposes more and more of the time which was once available for private members, by the cutting down of debates, by the closure, and now by requiring the vote for an entire department to be passed en bloc, without criticism of details, we are shown that while extension of the franchise has been seeming to increase the liberties of citizens, their liberties have been decreased by restricting the spheres of action of their representatives. All these are stages in that concentration of power which is the concomitant of imperialism. And how this tendency works out where militancy becomes active, we are shown by the measures taken in South Africa—the proclamation of martial law by a governor, who thereby becomes in so far a despot, and the temporary suspension of constitutional government, a suspension which many so-called loyalists would make complete.

Passing by this, however, let us note the extent to which the citizen is the servant of the community in disguised ways. Certain ancient usages will best make this clear. During times when complete slavery was mingled with serfdom, the serf, tied to his plot, rendered to his lord or seignior many dues and services. These services, or corvees, varied, according to the period and the place, from one day's labor to six days' labor in the week—from partial slavery to complete slavery. Labors and exactions of these kinds were most of them in course of time commuted for money; the equivalence between so much tax paid to the lord and so much work done for him, being thus distinctly recognized. Now, in so far as the burden is concerned, it comes to the same thing if for the feudal lord we substitute the central government, and for local money payments we substitute general taxes. The essential question for the citizen is what part of his work goes to the power which rules over him, and what part remains available for satisfying his own wants.

Labor demanded by the state is just as much corvée to the state as labor demanded by the feudal lord was corvée to him, though it may not be called so and though it may be given in money instead of in kind; and to the extent of this corvée each citizen is a serf to the community. Some five years ago M. Guyot calculated that in France the civil and military expenditure absorbs some 30 per cent of the national produce, or, in other words, that ninety days annually of the average citizen's labor is given to the state under compulsion.

Though to a smaller extent, what holds in France holds here. Not forgetting the heavy burdens of state corvées which the imperialism of past days bequeathed to us—the one hundred and fifty millions of debt incurred for the American war and the fifty millions we took over with the East India Company's possessions, the interest on both of which entails on citizens extra labor anually—let us limit ourselves to the burdens imperialism now commits us to. From a statistical authority second to none I learn that one hundred millions of annual expenditure requires from the average citizen the labor of one day in every seventeen—that is to say, nearly eighteen days in the year. As the present permanent expenditure on army and navy plus the interest on the debt recently contracted amounts to about seventy-six millions, it results that thirteen and one-half days' labor per annum is thus imposed on the average citizen as corvée; and there comes the £153,000,000 spent and to be spent on the South African and Chinese wars, to which may be added, for all subsequent costs of pensions, repairs, compensations, and reinstatements, a sum which will raise the total to more than £200,000,000.

What is the taxation which direct expenditure and interest on loans will entail, the reader may calculate. He has before him the data for an estimate of the extra number of days annually during which imperialism will require him to work for the Government—extra number, I say, because to meet the ordinary State expenditure there must always be a large number of days spent by him as a State laborer. Doubtless one who is satisfied by names instead of things, as the Romans were, will think this statement absurd; but he who understands by freedom the ability to use his powers for his own ends, with no greater hindrance than is implied by the like ability of each other citizen, will see that, in whatever disguised ways he is obliged to use his abilities for State purposes, he is to that extent a serf of the State, and that as fast as our growing imperialism augments the amounts of such compulsory service he is to that extent more and more a serf of the State.

And then beyond the round-about services given by the citizen under the form of direct taxes, and under the form of indirect taxes, severally equivalent to so many days' work that would else have elevated the lives of himself and his belongings, there will presently come the actual or potential service as a soldier, demanded by the State to carry out an imperialistic policy—a service which, as those in South Africa can tell us, often inflicts, under the guise of fine names, a slavery harder than that which the negro bears, with the added risk of death.

Even were it possible to bring home to men the extent to which their lives are, and presently will be still more, subordinated to state requirements, so as to leave them less and less owned by themselves, little effect would be produced. So long as the passion for mastery overrides all others the slavery that goes along with imperialism will be tolerated. Among men who do not pride themselves on the possession of purely human traits, but on the possession of traits which they have in common with brutes, and in whose mouths "bulldog courage" is equivalent to manhood among people who take their point of honor from the prize ring, in which the combatant submits to pain, injury, and risk of death in the determination to prove himself "the better man," no deterrent considerations like the above will have any weight. So long as they continue to conquer other peoples and to hold them in subjection, they will readily merge their personal liberties in the power of the state, and hereafter, as heretofore, accept the slavery that goes along with imperialism.

The Louisiana purchase was not imperialism, nor did it contain the seeds of imperialism. The annexation of adjacent territory, with the avowed purpose of making that territory part and parcel of the United States, is not imperialism. The holding of foreign lands and foreign people, at our will and independent of theirs, is imperialism, and the word will have to be distorted indeed to cover the Louisiana purchase. In the course we are pursuing we have the company of Russia, of Germany, and, preeminently, of England; but as I understand the words of caution and direction that have come down from the fathers of the Republic, the policy of those countries is obnoxious to the basic principles upon which we have rested our form of Government.

This bill settles the policy of the Republican party. It is to be continuing possession and occupancy with unlimited additions to our bonded debt. This bill means that we are to permanently hold the Philippine Islands, and I predict the holding will prove a plague to ourselves and our children. In the history of this world no nation, from ancient Rome to pestered England, has ever held colonies that did not prove a curse. England every twenty-four hours has a nightmare, dreaming that her foreign subjects have risen to destroy her, as some day they will.

The Democratic party does not occupy an equivocal position in the premises. We do not believe in an imperial policy. We hope to defeat it, and if we obtain power we will destroy every vestige of that policy enacted by the Republican party.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Certainly; but I must remark that the clock is making rapid strides toward midnight.

Mr. OLMSTED. If I understand your distinction between expansion and imperialism it is that expansion is where we capture and acquire territory immediately adjacent. Therefore, when we captured Florida, with the Seminole Indians, that was expansion, but if we had kept Cuba, there being some water intervening, that would have been imperialism.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The intervention of water would not mark the line between imperialism and expansion. Necessarily the application of the words are governed, to a great extent, by intention. If you "capture," to use your word, and hold, that is imperialism. Perhaps I can find in the work of the fathers an answer to the gentleman. I have no objection to the acquisition of contiguous territory. I do not object to the acquisition of Cuba. But I have it in mind that when this country was christened it was called "the United States of America," not "of America and Asia." There is the line between the two propositions. This is the "United States," and the fathers went farther and said, not "of the world," but "of America;" and I believe that all the territory within the Americas can be admitted to the United States without imperialism.

Mr. OLMSTED. Including South American territory?

Mr. McDERMOTT. South American republics? I see no objection to it. To hold a South American country in subjection, not intending to admit it to the sisterhood of States, would be imperialism.

Mr. OLMSTED. One more question. You said that as our bill provided for the issuance of bonds which are to be paid in not more than thirty years and not less than five, that that was evidence of our intention to remain in the Philippine Islands for that period. What do you say to the bill of the minority, without any limit of time?

Mr. McDERMOTT. It seems to me if you issued bonds without any limit of time you would necessarily issue temporary obligations.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much do they amount to?

Mr. McDERMOTT. There is no limit. The scheme is a grand one—to build everything, to buy everything, and issue bonds; and I venture to say that after they have settled down to the collection of internal revenue in the Philippine Islands there will not be enough collected in any year to pay the interest on the bonds, much less to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. They could not issue any bonds without the consent of the Philippine Commission, which is made the senate, could they?

Mr. McDERMOTT. If you will read the report of the Secretary of War, you will find that they have started in. Take up that report and read it. Of course bonds can not be issued without the consent of the government. I know that. Fancy can not imagine a good bond ever issued without the consent of the government. But let me direct you to this fact. During the civil war, when the solvency of the North was in doubt, when it was a question whether the gray or the blue was to conquer, when London refused our securities, the longest bonds issued were 7-30 and 10-40 bonds, giving the right to redeem in seven and ten years. What will be issued under this bill? You provide a thirty-year gold bond, guaranteed by the United States, the proceeds to be used for the Philippine improvements. That is what you are issuing. The scheme is a grand one.

Mr. OLMSTED. Their treasury is in a much better condition than ours was during the last Democratic Administration. There is not any difficulty here; there is not much danger of the United States being called upon to pay them.

Mr. McDERMOTT. What treasury is in a better condition?

Mr. OLMSTED. The Philippine treasury.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I do not know the condition of the Philippine treasury, and I do not believe that you know what there is in that treasury.

Mr. OLMSTED. They have $7,000,000 in their treasury to-day.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Well, if it is in the condition that you say, and you say it is perfectly solvent, why are you authorizing a thirty-year 5 per cent gold bond to pay for improvements?

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, we do not propose to do it unless the improvements are of sufficient importance.

Mr. McDERMOTT. If your treasury is in such a condition, why not issue a shorter time bond?

Mr. OLMSTED. There is no provision requiring them to issue bonds.

Mr. McDERMOTT. There is no other way to get money to buy the lands with. The bill directs the purchase, and the mixed government you are establishing is authorized to issue bonds to buy. Is not that tantamount to a direction to sell bonds?

Mr. HILL. On that point it is prescribed that they have the option to pay them off in five years or in not more than thirty years.

Mr. McDERMOTT. They will be issued for thirty years.

Mr. HILL. They will be issued under the terms of the bill.

Mr. McDERMOTT. They will be issued for thirty years.

Mr. HILL. And the terms of the bill are that they shall not be less than five nor more than thirty years.

Mr. McDERMOTT. They will be issued for thirty years.

Mr. HILL. They will be issued for five years or not more than thirty.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I challenge the gentleman to find any legislation that ever authorized a bond of the kind authorized by this bill that was not followed by the issue of a thirty-year bond.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Will the gentleman state what provision of the bill of the minority proposes that we will issue bonds—that they may issue bonds?

Mr. OLMSTED. That the congress of the Philippines shall have power to borrow money on the credit of the Philippines without limit as to time.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman, in the first place, that is not the measure which the minority of the committee offer as a substitute, and the gentleman knows it as well as I do.

Mr. OLMSTED. I did not know it. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs, and I supposed he knew what nearly every man in the House must know.

Mr. OLMSTED. This is the bill reported by the minority of the committee over the signatures of six gentlemen. I had not been informed of any other bill, or that any other decision had been reached, until I heard the gentleman from Mississippi this afternoon.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I think if the gentleman had listened to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that he explained all about that in what he had to say to the House this afternoon. I saw the gentleman sitting in front of him, and if the gentleman did not understand his remarks I can not understand why he did not.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Is that the only provision that you have under that bill—the authority to borrow money?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes; that is it.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Let me say to the gentleman there is a construction that any lawyer acquainted with municipal law should know. Ex necessitate when a people start a government, not having any funds, they must give that government authority to issue bonds payable through the creation of a fund for annual part payments or give them the authority to borrow money.

Now, if authority is merely given one to borrow money, that authority is limited to the official life of the borrower. They could not issue any bonds under the proposition that they were authorized to borrow money.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Let me suggest that that is to be done by the Filipinos themselves. We turn the government over to them.

Mr. OLMSTED. And the President of the United States is to appoint the president of the Filipinos.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I agree with you on that proposition. That is the proposition in this bill. The words "government of the Philippine Islands" mean, in the last resort, the Government of the United States of America. That is what they mean.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then the gentleman agrees with me that the minority bill is even more permanent in its character than the majority bill, because one limits it to thirty years and the other indefinitely.

Mr. McDERMOTT. As I have said, the power to borrow money, when that power is a naked one and time not mentioned, is confined to the life of the body that borrows.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, suppose they had not paid it when they changed the form of government, would the obligation to pay then expire?

Mr. McDERMOTT. It would be due. The money would be due. Let me illustrate. If your town council, which probably has the right to issue notes, should issue a note in anticipation of the collection of taxes for the present fiscal year, that note must be paid or provided for within that fiscal year unless you have some other statutory provision. Now, my time is being exhausted, and I should be pleased to send the gentleman Dillon on Municipal Corporations, which is chock full of that subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to read a line or so from Thomas Jefferson:

President Jefferson's advice: "Kindly separated by nature and a wide ocean from the exterminating havoc of one-quarter of the globe, too high-minded to endure the degradation of the others, possessing a chosen country, with room enough for our descendants to the thousandth and thousandth generation, etc.—with all these blessings, what more is necessary to make us a happy and prosperous people?" (Inaugural address, 1801.)

"Separated by a wide ocean from the nations of Europe and from the political interests which entangle them, we should be most unwise were we to cast away the blessings of the position in which nature has placed us, the opportunities she has endowed us with of pursuing, at a distance from foreign contention, the paths of industry, peace, and happiness, of cultivating general friendship, and of bringing collisions of interest to the empirage of reason rather than of force." (Message to Congress October 17, 1803.)

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes; I recall that. There is no doubt whatever about the doctrine of Thomas Jefferson. Thomas Jefferson believed in that. Thomas Jefferson did not believe in going abroad to get territory.

THE CIVIL WAR.

There is one subject that has burdened every speech delivered on the side of the Administration. We have been told that the Democratic party was false to this country during the civil war. The statement is untrue. It is time, in the interest of civilization and progress, that that manner of talk be stopped on the side of the majority. According to her population no State in this Union sent more troops to fight for the Stars and Stripes than the then Democratic State of New Jersey; none.

The civil war was inevitable, and it had its being from seed not sown during the life of any man who participated in it. It was a sectional conflict and the word "patriot" applies as fully, fairly, and truly to the man who fought in the gray as to the man who fought in the blue. It was a question of residence. Had Ulysses S. Grant been born and raised in Georgia and lived there in 1861 he would have fought under the flag of the Confederacy.

Had Robert E. Lee been born in Vermont, and raised there, and lived there in 1861, he would have fought under the Stars and Stripes. It was a question of environment, and whether he believed or not in the policy of his State, it was the duty of the citizen of Georgia to shoulder his musket for the Confederacy just as much as it was the duty of the citizen of New Jersey, independent of political affiliation, to shoulder his musket under Grant. That is the truth that history will some time write. In the light of that truth there can be found no excuse for personal or sectional hatred, and nothing is more contemptible in the debates of this House than an attempt to rekindle sectional animosity. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

THE BILL IS TO ESTABLISH A PERMANENT GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Chairman, we on the Democratic side of this House have no objection to aiding the Federal Government to "reach a legitimate conclusion," to use the words of the gentleman who preceded me [Mr. LACEY]. What we object to is aiding the Government to reach an illegitimate conclusion. The bill before the House is a falsehood in its title, because its title does not agree with its context. It is entitled:

A bill temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

In the body of the bill we find outlined a policy that does not admit of the use of the word "temporary." We find a continuance of the policy that is set out in the report of the War Department, where it is shown that millions of bonds have been authorized by the Philippine government for the purpose of improvements. We find in this bill a proposition that no Congress would dare to impose upon the Treasury for improvements in this country—a proposition that the government of the Philippine Islands shall be authorized to provide harbor improvements by issuing bonds.

We find that millions of dollars are provided for the purchase of the lands held by the ecclesiasts, the money to be obtained by issuing bonds. They are to be paid in gold. By whom are they issued? By the government of the Philippine Islands. What is that government? Now and after the enactment of this bill that government is and will be the Government of the United States of America, and the bonds issued there are and necessarily will be obligations of this country. You can not escape the proposition that on the threshhold of your alleged efforts to aid the Filipino people to correct government you are authorizing the Philippine Commission to bond this country, and those bonds, placed in any foreign market, will not only be obligations that we must in morals protect, but they will be obligations of which international law will take cognizance.

If the bonds that are provided for in this bill were to-morrow floated in the London market or on the Bourse in Paris, this country would surely have to see that every obligation of those bonds was kept, or there would be a war between nations. We have been asked on the other side why we do not provide a substitute. We have a bill. I do not think you are going to accept it as an amendment, but we are going to submit its propositions to the people and ask them to overrule your judgment.

We have a policy. We believe that the civilized inhabitants of the Philippine Islands should be protected until they have established a government of their own and, through its principal branches, expressed a desire to be let alone. We want to leave it to them to say when they are willing to forego the protection of the American Army. We believe that the idea of holding colonies in Asia should be now and forever abandoned. We believe that a treaty should be entered into with the Filipinos securing to us all the rights necessary for the advancement of our commercial interests. We believe that at the earliest possible moment the thousands of Americans who are bearing arms in those islands should be allowed to return to civil life.

We believe that the lessons learned from the treaty of Paris should be a warning to the future, teaching the wisdom of the fathers of American liberty when they said that this Republic should be of America. We believe it is time to stop murdering people in the name of religion and civilization. We believe that a monopoly of that practice should be left to European powers, and particularly to England. We do not believe in wars to either civilize or exterminate Asiatic tribes.

We do not believe that the Creator is in joint partnership with the land and mine grabbers who are after the material things in the Philippine Islands. We do not want an American Warren Hastings on trial in this room. We do not believe in the permanent occupancy of the islands. We do believe that, true to our Republic, true to its traditions, true to its future and its flag, we can leave those islands with honor to ourselves, and that when we do so the civilized world will accord us the greeting, "Thy gentleness hath made thee great." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SCHIRM].

Mr. SCHIRM. Mr. Chairman, I do not question the actual patriotism of any member of this House, but we have been trained in different political schools, and therefore we approach questions in different ways and look at them from different perspectives. We are all, however, either consciously or unconsciously influenced by our desire to promote the welfare of our own political party.

In our occupation of the Philippine Islands Democrats can see only a scheme of continual wrong and a violation of the Constitution; while Republicans, on the other hand, see in it the development of great good and the fulfillment of a high destiny. The best view in my judgment that can be obtained of the Administration's purpose in the Philippine Islands is contained in a paragraph of the proclamation issued by the Philippine Commission at Manila on April 4, 1899. It reads as follows:

His Excellency the President of the United States believes that this felicity and perfection above referred to of the Philippine people is to be brought about by the assurance of peace and order, by the guaranty of civil and religious liberty, by the establishment of justice, by the cultivation of letters, science, and the liberal and practical arts, by the enlargement of intercourse with foreign nations, by the expansion of industrial pursuits, trade, and commerce, by the multiplication and improvement of the means of internal communications, by the development, with the aid of modern mechanical inventions, of the great natural resources of the archipelago, and, in a word, by the uninterrupted devotion of the people to the pursuit of those useful objects and the realization of those noble ideals which constitute the highest civilization of mankind.

Influenced by these sentiments, the Administration has begun a task in the Philippine Islands which has been but lightly touched upon by the members on this side, and almost entirely ignored by members on the other side. It has instituted a system of education whereby the children of the Filipinos, and even the adults themselves, may be trained not only in the Spanish but also in the English language, and receive all of the other benefits which spring from education. It is axiomatic that at the foundation of all civilization lies education, and I believe that he who promotes education in its true sense can never be innately an oppressor. It was once said by a European emperor: "Keep the people ignorant and they will be easy to rule;" but the Republican party and the present Administration believe that if we educate the people they will easily rule themselves. We are laying the foundations for a greater civilization in the Philippine Islands, and while our friends on the other side are caviling and quibbling, while they are complaining about things that have unhappily transpired, and which we do not condone, while they see only the dark side, the Administration is moving grandly onward, carrying out its policy of education, and uplifting the people of the Philippine Islands to a higher state of being; it is preparing the way for the future prosperity and the future autonomy of those islands.

The natives who are intelligent enough to appreciate the advantages provided for them through the public schools are eager in their attendance. The sons and daughters of our country, graduates of our best institutions, are giving their time and services toward the mental upbuilding of our Filipino charges, while the gentlemen on the opposite side of this Chamber are accusing us of establishing an unholy policy of persecution and cruelty—in fact, many of the soldiers whose services as such are no longer needed have themselves become teachers, and are demonstrating to the world that the American soldier does not love warfare except as a means of establishing the arts of peace.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I ask a question right there? Is that to be the same sort of education that for a great many decades the Government has been giving to the Indian tribes of this country?

Mr. SCHIRM. I fully appreciate the facetiousness of the question of the gentleman from Missouri, and in the same spirit I reply to him. I know of no declaration of the Administration to the effect that the education in the Philippines is to be the same as that given to the Indian tribes, and therefore I will not take it upon myself to make any declaration on the question.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Then you do not know how beneficent it will be?

Mr. SCHIRM. I know that it will be more beneficent than the system which prevailed in some of the Southern States prior to the civil war, where it was a capital offense to teach a black man his letters; but if the gentleman is really looking for information I will refer him to one of the reports of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, on page 349, a part of which reads as follows:

After several public sessions, held for the purpose of learning the wishes of the Filipino people in regard to educational matters, wherein much public interest was manifested and the various phases of the subject discussed at length, act 34, the educational bill, was enacted by the Commission, and became a law January 21, 1901.

So that I apprehend whatever kind of education is given to the Filipinos will be of such a character as to be satisfactory to both them and to us.

Besides establishing schools for general education, one of the acts which has been promulgated provides also for schools of agriculture and manual training. If we have the deep, dark designs against the Filipinos which the Democrats charge, why should we educate them and try to fit them to grapple with life's questions and help them to easier methods of earning a livelihood? It has been said "Knowledge is power." The same may be said of education, and he who comes in the spirit of a subjugator does not put power into the hands of his victims.

We must remember that the Filipinos are not a distinct and complete unit as a people. There are 3 different races—the Negritos, the Indonesian, and the Malayan—each divided into many tribes, aggregating 84, 69 of which have no conception of civilization. It will take a long time before the leaven of education will permeate every quarter of those islands, but it is a move in the right direction, and it is through the public schools that the policy of the Administration to put in office Filipinos who show the requisite capabilities will eventually be worked out.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will ask if it is not true historically that from the date of Spanish occupation down to the date of American occupation municipal control was left by Spain in the hands of the Filipino people in every province in the northern islands?

Mr. SCHIRM. Suppose that is true. What follows from that?

Mr. COCHRAN. Is it not true that under that system they had in each municipality an effective government which preserved the peace, good order, and safety of person and property from the date of the Spanish surrender until the date of the collision between their troops and ours?

Mr. SCHIRM. Well, suppose that is true. What follows from that?

Mr. COCHRAN. I want to ask one further question.

Mr. SCHIRM. No, I will not submit to another question until we settle this.

Mr. COCHRAN. What is your question?

Mr. SCHIRM. Suppose we admit that what you say is true, what follows?

Mr. COCHRAN, It follows that the continual insinuation that those people are not capable of self-government is refuted by the continuous history of three hundred years of civilized municipal governmental control by them through those islands, except the army in the city of Manila and a tax collector in each municipality.

Mr. SCHIRM. There are governments and there are governments.

Mr. COCHRAN. Now, I will ask the further question if it is not true that a lieutenant of our Army and a midshipman of our Navy traversed Luzon from one end to the other immediately after the Spanish surrender and found this government everywhere effective, and found the people in the peaceful pursuit of their ordinary business, and order and safety everywhere prevailing?

Mr. SCHIRM. Suppose we admit that, for the sake of argument, what follows from it?

Mr. COCHRAN. It follows by that mere fact that the insinuation that you must butcher a certain number of these people in order to teach them the art of self-government is folly, when the fact is they have had municipal control under Democratic institutions for two hundred years. Spain never undertook to take that away from them and never did.

Mr. SCHIRM. I do not propose that you shall make a speech in my time. I have said that there are governments and there are governments. There are officers and officers. But I do contend that the best that the Filipinos produced, up to the time of American occupation, can not in any way compare with the standard and character of American institutions and American officials.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will you please——

Mr. SCHIRM. I will not yield again. The attempt to make it appear that the Filipinos are capable of self-government, as we understand self-government, is only a subterfuge. No people can rise above their intelligence in the matters of government. So that the Filipinos, being beneath us in every conception of government, in everything that goes to make up the individual rights of the citizen, necessarily can not reach the high standard of our country. I said when we educate them and give them a clear understanding of citizenship and a new idea of constitutional government, the Filipinos will then be better able to govern themselves.

Under the Spanish régime there was a provision for one male and one female teacher for every 5,000 inhabitants, but as a matter of fact there was but one teacher to every 3,500. The whole number of teachers in all the islands was but 1,914. Many of them were incompetent. Little attention was paid to those studies regarded by us as essential. Discipline was lax; the education of the people was a mere pretense.

Act No. 74 of the Philippine Commission provides for 1,000 trained teachers at monthly salaries of not less than $75 per month nor more than $125, and pursuant to the provisions of this act the general superintendent of public instruction for the Philippine Islands authorized the selection of a large number of these teachers by various colleges, State superintendents of education, and others, no reference being made to denomination or religious belief. The remainder were appointed by the general superintendent of public instruction, upon direct application to him at Manila, through the Insular Division, and there is nothing on record to indicate the religious denomination or the political opinion of any of the persons so selected. One hundred and fifteen educational institutions in all sections of the country furnished teachers for this work.

The salaries of teachers under the Spanish occupation ranged for men from $7.50 to $20 per month and for women from $5 to $12.50 per month. Most of these teachers were poorly trained for their occupation. Positions for the four higher grades were filled by competitive examinations between holders of teachers' titles, but a considerable number of teachers were mere "assistants" and "temporary incumbents," who were not required to have titles. In volume 1 of the report of the Philippine Commission, 1900, page 32, it is stated:

> In some towns special buildings served as schoolhouses. At best they were usually cheaply constructed and most inadequately equipped. Often a room in the house of the schoolmaster or mistress served in lieu of a schoolhouse, while the lack of text-books, blackboards, and even of writing materials frequently made it necessary that much or all of the instruction should be oral.

A circular issued by Dr. Fred W. Atkinson, general superintendent of public instruction at Manila, on April 2, 1902, provides that applicants who wish to become teachers in the Philippine Islands must be either normal or college graduates; that they must have several years' successful experience in school work and be engaged in teaching at the time of making the application; and further, that they must be prepared to dispense with all the accustomed luxuries and even endure hardships while in the islands.

On October 1, 1901, as shown by Appendix BB, part 2, report of the Philippine Commission, October 15, 1901, 743 teachers had arrived and had been distributed among 34 provinces. Of this number 148 were soldiers discharged in the islands.

In a circular issued by the Division of Insular Affairs, dated May 13, 1902, under the title "Substituting the schoolhouse for the garrison," it is stated:

> From that time on the garrison has given way to the school district, and the commanding officer has been succeeded by the school superintendent; guard mount has been exchanged for the daily prattle of children going to and from their schoolhouses, and from every district in the Philippines come reports of earnest, active work by teachers, magnificent results achieved, and a general desire on the part of all—young and old—to become familiar with the English language and mode of teaching.
> So successfully has this work been accomplished that we find Governor Taft stating before the Senate Committee on the Philippines, on page 279, that the American teachers have been scattered into 445 towns in the islands, of which but 245 are now garrisoned, and in 200 towns into which there are no soldiers.

January 1, 1902, the number of teachers was increased to 817, and on May 27, 1902, to 967, leaving at that time but 33 appointments to be made to meet the requirements of the law.

In order to show how the people receive the educational project I desire to call attention to some quotations made from part 2 of the report of the Philippine Commission to the Secretary of War in December, 1901, first on page 531:

> Everywhere an English teacher is sent he is welcomed enthusiastically. In order to meet the demands of the people of the archipelago a larger number than 1,000 English teachers will be needed.

And again, on same page:

> Nearly one-third of the teachers of English are giving evening instructions in English to adults. Among those who are in attendance are persons of almost every vocation and profession, including native municipal and provincial officers. An English primer is used first and later followed by texts written in easy English on American history and civil government.

On page 574 of the same report appears the following:

> Many towns have asked for and received evening schools, taught by American teachers. The attendance at such schools is very good and the better and more ambitious class of people attend—clerks, translators, prospective teachers, or commercial employees. A large increase in the number of these schools is noted since the distribution of the large lot of teachers.

And again, on page 575:

> A rough estimate, based upon the reports received in this office and the number of English teachers in the field, may be given. There are probably over 150,000 Filipino pupils enrolled in the free primary schools which have been established by the American Government, and over 75,000 pupils in actual attendance. There are probably 3,000 to 4,000 elementary Filipino teachers, 1,800 to 2,000 of whom are receiving one hour of English instruction daily. There are at least 10,000 adults receiving English instruction in the evening schools conducted by American teachers. Applications from adults are coming from all over the archipelago for English instruction. The American teachers are being given authority to establish evening schools wherever they are needed. There will shortly be from 20,000 to 30,000 attending these schools. Requests for large quantities of school supplies have now become so numerous that soon large orders will have to be placed with American firms for additional school material. Great interest is shown by Filipinos at large in educational matters, and the eagerness for English instruction before reported upon is still unabated.

This is a glorious work, undertaken in the spirit of benevolence, and is an attempt to bring about what President McKinley called "benevolent assimilation." We are not in the Philippines to crush, but to uplift; not to destroy, but to preserve; not to humiliate, but to ennoble. Our labors are not in the interest of king or prince, but for the purpose of extending the best form of government known to the world; to stimulate through education the desire for higher things; to prepare the way for a greater and grander civilization than, in my judgment, could ever have been achieved under either Spanish or Filipino dominion. [Loud applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. EDDY].

[Mr. EDDY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, the importance of any question to our country at the present day is accurately gauged by the amount of attention it receives from the press, the pulpit, its discussion in the halls of legislation, and the general interest shown in it by the people themselves. Judged from this standpoint, it is evident that the issue which we have been debating the last few days—the Philippine problem—has become beyond doubt a paramount question for our nation to consider and settle.

It is rightly a great and serious subject, both from a political and an economic point of view, pertaining as it does to our own material interest, and, what is of far greater importance, the future of 10,000,000, approximately, of human beings whose welfare and happiness we are becoming responsible for—men and women of a different race, color, and languages, with habits and traditions entirely contrary to our institutions, and living in a tropical clime some 8,000 miles from our shores. It is well we should, therefore, pause and view the matter calmly and dispassionately.

Especially is this subject a grave one in view of its opening the question of a change of Government policy and perhaps the launching of our nation into the arena of world power as a colonizer, or, at least, the possessor of colonies.

I am of the opinion that a large percentage of the people of the United States are still averse to any change in our past policy or the suggestion of imperialism and that they will not look with favor on the permanent adoption of new lines which will place us on record as being willing to take upon ourselves the burden of the government of foreign alien races or the assuming as a part of our national policy that we should hereafter seek foreign territory, but rather that the sentiment prevails that it is best for us to avoid these entanglements and to hold to the old theory that we have a large enough country of our own to develop and that the expansion ambition should be curbed.

There is a great difference between colonizing and imperial government. Where new territory is taken over, sparsely settled, and then is populated by sending out men and women from the home country to settle and develop the new, there are no great problems of government to contend with, or only slight ones, and the necessity of dealing with an alien race does not present itself to a great extent. But where you become the arbitrator, through purchase or conquest of discovery, of the destinies of millions of your fellow human beings, the question is an entirely different one, and the difficulties of handling the issue with justice to yourself and in conformity with the proper rights of the alien race become a much more troublesome matter, imperialism can be charged, and no nation is wise to involve itself in such a position if it is situated as we are and the feeling of the people is opposed.

The illustration can well be shown as between Australia and New Zealand, and say India, all of which countries are practically dependencies of the British Empire. England is really an Empire and a colonial power. In the case of Australasia the English nation settled the land, which was only sparsely populated and with an inferior race of natives, so far as Australia proper is concerned, and owing to these conditions the alien race never became a serious factor with the settlers. Even here, however, the illustration of the survival of the fittest became clear from the start, and the natives were driven back into the bush, were killed off indiscriminately, and their treatment was not what it should have been under a more humanitarian policy.

In New Zealand the natives were of a higher type and character. They were also in large numbers, based on the extent of territory, and their treatment has been better; reservations were held for them, and they have reached a fair grade of civilization. However, these islands were practically new land opened for Europeans, and the result has been that, not being hampered by alien races, the colonists were able to develop the natural resources, take advantage of the magnificent climate, and in less than a century great colonies have been built up inhabited by four to five millions of well-educated, refined, and prosperous people. Several cities of two to three thousand inhabitants exist equal to any of similar size in the world, and, with the exception of our own nation, no land has probably ever grown so rapidly and advanced to such a high order in so short a time.

In India, however, entirely contrary factors had to be met. The population was enormous and dense, based on the extent of territory. There was little room for colonization by the conquering nation, and they had to dominate by force of arms, and held, and still hold, the country largely for their own benefit commercially, and are only able to do so owing to the want of means of concerted action by an inferior race; also by reason of the different elements and nationalities making up the several hundred millions of alien people.

England has undoubtedly done much for the good of the inhabitants, and their condition has been benefited and their personal interests advanced, but they have been held back largely by reason of the natural fear that too much liberty might be unwise and likely would prove dangerous. Nothing has been done to break down the fostered traditions of hatred between the different tribes, a spirit of liberty has not been encouraged, the natives do not hold arms, and while justice reigns throughout the land beyond question, it is nevertheless a pure type of despotic imperial government without the consent of the alien races.

Let us look for a moment at the question of our position and whether we have really gone beyond our traditions or have simply followed the natural evolution of a great people guided by circumstances and events which have irresistibly forced us forward to take the place as a nation in relation to these new colonies which we hold to-day. I claim that the latter is the true condition and not the former. One speaker here to-night from New Jersey [Mr. MCDERMOTT] has bandied lightly with the name of God. He is not here at the moment. But I take decided issue with him. I believe that the destiny of man and the destiny of nations are watched over by the guiding hand of Providence.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will.

Mr. SULZER. Do you think God sent us and our armies to the Philippine Islands to subjugate the Filipinos?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would not like to enter into a controversy on religious subjects on this floor with the gentleman from New York; but I simply will answer him this way, that I think if God did send us there, it was for the future welfare of these people and it was well done. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SULZER. Do you put your thought above God's will?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not put it above or below. I simply say I do not give much credit to the irreverent statements in connection with the Almighty that our friend from New Jersey made.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. You stated that you believed there is a God who exercises control in the affairs of the nation. I will ask you if you think the devil has gone out of business entirely?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Sometimes when I hear my friends on the other side of the House address us I am inclined to think that he is very much in business. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. COCHRAN. I will ask further if it is not conceivable that he might have a good deal to do with such enterprises as the recent butchery of the Boers and the career of the Americans in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am not discussing the relation of other nations to their colonies. I am addressing myself to the relations of this nation to her colonies.

Let us consider for a moment what we have done. The Hawaiian Islands have become naturally a possession of this country, and I believe it is wise and well that we have allowed them to enter into the nation as one of our family, and the measure commends itself beyond doubt to practically everyone. Besides, it would not have done to have allowed other nations to obtain a foothold there. These beautiful islands are situated 1,500 to 1,800 miles only from our shores. They are the gateway to the Golden Gate itself and within the line of defense of our western shores. I further believe the Hawaiian people will be better off under our guidance and our care than they would have been if left to govern themselves.

It is unfortunately true that whenever any foreign, or at least copper-colored, race comes in contact with the Anglo-Saxon they are prone to fall and fade away. I fear that will be the result with the Hawaiians. They are not well adapted to our civilization. They accept our evil habits, but they do not acquire so readily our good ones. But I hope that under the benign influence of our guidance they will last longer than if we had left them to themselves. And no effort on our part should be spared to this end. We must not forget as well that there was a large population there of Chinese and Japanese in addition to the Americans, English, Germans, Italians, etc. Consequently, when we acquired possession we took over in part a European and an Asiatic population as well as the Hawaiians.

In connection with Samoa, we may have drifted a little further from the anchor of safety than we did with Hawaii. There we had no excuse for taking territory except our desire to secure a good anchorage and harbor for our vessels, and a coaling station. But Germany was there, England was there, andwe felt that our protection in case of warfare required that we also should take our share, and we have therefore divided the islands between us by agreement.

Personally, I believe it would have been wiser to simply have taken a coaling station. However, the people of the Samoan Islands are naturally not warlike. We have not adopted any large number of these people, and I do not think we will meet any very serious complications by reason of our action, and we may ultimately benefit to some extent.

This brings us to the main issue, the war with Spain, and I claim, notwithstanding what others may have said in debate, that the war was undertaken with the highest principles, and personally I believe that we should have demanded of Spain her withdrawal from Cuba many years before hostilities occurred, and a firmer policy on our part might have acccomplished it. That island was downtrodden, misgoverned, and her people persecuted for hundreds of years. It was right that she should obtain relief, and the whole people of this country are beyond a doubt pleased and gratified at the part they played in giving her freedom. I again take this opportunity to state that I indorse the policy of the President in relation to her material benefit as the right one, and that his stand to-day in demanding for her commercial advantages which we can undoubtedly concede, without injury to ourselves, is wise, and should be granted without further cavil-ing or delay.

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman will pardon me, he is in accord with his own party and with a majority of the Republican party in both Houses of Congress in that respect.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I accept with pleasure the amendment stated by the gentleman from Connecticut. I believe it is a small minority of our party that differ with me on that subject.

At the close of the war we extended the plane of our intentions, and felt that Porto Rico, also being so close to our shores, was entitled to have consideration at our hands and be granted freedom from Spanish rule, and great wisdom was shown in taking upon ourselves the government of this island, it also being necessary for the protection of our own eastern shores, and doing all for them as a member of our family that we hope the Cuban people will be able to do for themselves through our instrumentality.

Porto Rico has improved so vastly in every manner that pertains to its civilization and advancement that the people themselves now admit the immense strides they have made, and we have obtained the plaudits of the world for our clear-sightedness, careful administration, and justice.

We now come to the most important question, and it is well known by everybody that when we took up arms in behalf of Cuba we had no ulterior motives or fixed plans of any kind in so far as related to the Philippine Islands. The Spanish fleet was destroyed by Dewey, and it was then found that we could hardly leave the harbor, as the Spaniards being themselves in difficulties with the Filipinos could not have held their position and thousands of lives were in jeopardy. It was proper, therefore, that our fleet should remain and wait for developments.

When the final settlement of the war issues had to be reached we found ourselves in a serious dilemma. We could not, without a serious breach of good faith to these people, owing to their having helped us to a certain extent as against the Spaniards, acquiesce in the return of the islands to Spanish control. Nor did the world's civilization and the future of these people warrant it, based on the proof of the incompetency of Spain as a governing power during the past two hundred and fifty years. Again, it was a question whether Spain had the money and the power to again take charge, and the final result of the discussion was the treaty of Paris by which we acquired possession, and made a large payment to Spain, which further confirmed our title, although the money consideration was largely as a return to her for public expenditures and improvements made by her Government on the island.

The Filipinos themselves unquestionably had cherished the hope, or at least a certain faction of them, that they should be given control and be allowed to form a government of their own. It was found, however, impossible to have this done immediately, and complications resulted which we all know fully regarding and about the disastrous war which has followed under the leadership of Aguinaldo. Many contend that we could have left their destinies in their own hands and withdrawn from the islands at once; but careful research, the evidence of Army officers, civilians, disinterested persons, and those who had lived many years on the islands, is so convincing against the facts presented by the few who advocated this procedure that those who are not prejudiced and biased beyond reconciliation admit freely that while undoubtedly perhaps from 5 to 7½ per cent of the people of the different islands, and especially at Manila and near by, could have formed the elements of a government, yet that such was the jealousies of the different tribes and the temperament and disposition of the people that absolutely no freedom would have existed, and that it would have been a lamentable fallacy, and temporary quiet only under the despotic power of perhaps one man, and finally warfare of the most brutal character would have resulted among them, and the destruction of life and property, which we have unwillingly had to take a hand in, has been as nothing in comparison to the horror and violence which would have resulted from their being given a chance of self-government at that period.

I therefore claim that our position to-day in the Philippine Islands is in no wise the result of any change of policy on the part of this Government; that by assuming control of the islands we have not committed ourselves in any way to a colonial policy, either as colonists or imperialists, but that it has been a forged chain of circumstances which we could not control except by doing injustice to others, which is something our nation must never stand for, and that consequently we must look at the issue as a matter of destiny rather than as brought about by any positive or determined action by any section of our people or any party in power, and that it need form no precedent for the future.

Many of the speakers have endeavored to place the position as it now exists on the shoulders of either the Republican or the Democratic party, or have presented facts to prove that both parties were equally responsible. Personally, as the Republican party was in control, it seems wise that they should accept the responsibility. In fact, they would show good judgment if they unhesitatingly did so, to the end that we should not lose such a glorious heritage, and I, as a Republican, am willing to assume responsibility, so far as one member of Congress can go, for what we have done in those islands up to the present day, barring, of course, any injustice or injury the inhabitants may have received, either from the actions of civilians we have sent there to govern or from the hands of our soldiers, and expressing sincere regret at the unfortunate hostilities which were forced on us.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman says he is willing, as one member of the House of Representatives, to assume the responsibility for everything that has been done in the Philippines.

Mr. DOUGLAS. You have evidently not taken note of the important exceptions I named.

Mr. SULZER. Does the gentleman assume responsibility for General Smith's order to make Samar a howling wilderness and to kill all over 10 years of age—men, women, and children?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will answer that question with pleasure, and say I do not. I stated distinctly in my remarks, excepting so far as any injustice which the civilians we have sent to those islands to govern had done to the natives and also excluding any act which any man or any soldier in our Army has done, even if under great provocation. I certainly stand for no brutality, and join in wishing it punished. I think that answers the question of the gentleman from New York fully and completely.

Mr. SULZER. Well, it will not answer the question of the people.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I know nothing will satisfy the gentleman, but it will have to satisfy him as far as I am concerned. I know the gentleman's position, and it is a very poor one from my standpoint. I would commend my full remarks to the gentleman from New York. If he will read them, perhaps he will be enlightened. All great movements of nations have been criticised by the few, yet when the final history of the events have come to be written, and a sufficient number of years have elapsed to have it done without emotion or deep personal feeling, justice has been done; and I believe the same truth will hold good in our case, and that the future of those people will vindicate us fully and the wisdom of what has been accomplished by us will shine brightly and prove one of the most glorious achievements which this nation has ever accomplished, not for the good of ourselves, but for the benefit of others. In making this assertion I do so banking on the sound good sense, the honesty of purpose, and the Christian spirit of the American people, as everything depends on these facts. The whole question rests on the broad lines as to what are the motives which actuate the people of the United States in relation to their brother millions in the Philippine Islands. [Applause.]

I believe that we have approached this matter with the highest intentions and that the nation will demand of any party that is in power that they will follow these high lines in dealing with that country. The matter has reached an issue where beyond question we must now establish peace throughout the country. Our control must be recognized, our government firmly established, and these people must be given to then understand that law and order shall prevail. Admitted that this is accomplished, we must then turn to the civil administration of the islands, and there is no doubt that our people wish no carpetbag government to be established, but rather that the natives shall be encouraged to build themselves up in an educational way, to the end that they may obtain a fair share, yes, even the greater share, of all administrative offices, so that through our instruction and our aid they may finally be entitled to take absolute charge of their own destinies, and when I am satisfied that time has come I would not refuse their request, and only hope I may live to see it accomplished.

No effort should be made to crush out their spirit of liberty, but rather it should be encouraged and without deception on our part, and the ultimate goal of actual liberty should be held out to them.

Schools, educational institutions, hospitals, and every possible advantage of this character should be freely granted. Their lands should be carefully preserved for their benefit, and neither citizens of our own or other nations should be allowed to take hold of large tracts of their territory to their disadvantage. Where natives have held the land, or at least lived on it with their families, it should be counted as sufficient title, and they should be given possession, even if they have no clear proof of title beyond the facts named. Lands purchased from the friars should be largely, if not entirely, held for the natives. No slavery should be allowed to exist, and any present evidence of it should be stamped out as quickly as possible.

I claim, therefore, that the future of the Philippine Islands rests with the Filipinos themselves fully as much if not more than it does with the American people.

Many claim that they are cruel, treacherous, unreliable, and incapable of ever rising to the plane of civilization which other nations have obtained. Others with equal earnestness state that they are capable of the highest cultivation; that their treachery and their present disposition is simply the result of years of oppression and the despotic government of the Spanish people; that they can become good laborers, manufacturers, and merchants. In view of all this mass of different testimony, it appears utterly useless to make predictions and to advance theories which perhaps few men of the present day may live to know are true or not.

This question has reached a point where it will have to settle itself by time. How long a period may be required no man can tell; but when the time has arrived and these people can claim all that their friends now claim for them, then will come up for discussion whether they should be given that self-government which, we all regret, does not appear wise to grant them to-day.

We had best leave therefore to the future the determining of this point. I believe, however, that so deep is the feeling of liberty in the hearts of our own people, and so honest is our intention toward these islands, and so great our sense of justice, that if ultimately they have every right to ask of us their liberty we are likely to give it freely and again astonish the world by our generosity. We might couple it with protection against outside nations and other conditions for their benefit, which, however, it is useless to think about at present.

You can control the destinies of nations no more than the destinies of men. This has been proven in the past, and we have had many examples of it recently. Our country has been called upon suddenly and unexpectedly through destiny to take hold of and settle temporarily, at least, the future of others, and we have started out to accomplish it on new lines of our own. We have done great work so far, and have approached and are endeavoring to handle the great problems which confront us in a manner which will command the highest respect of mankind. Let us hope that nothing will interfere and that we will make a success of the venture as regards each one of the islands that have come under our control, and if we do, it will prove the brightest diadem in our national crown, as we will have shown the entire world what can be done, and our example will be so effective that never again will the old-time theory of oppression, and governing simply for the sake of the home countries' benefit be possible over any alien colony. [Applause.] A failure now on our part will put back the world's civilization a hundred years. Therefore parties without regard to class and our entire people without regard to theories, but on practical lines, should work together for the accomplishment and the carrying out of these great problems which we must face.

There does not appear to be anything which we can do for our own good, in so far as the islands are concerned, which will not be for their benefit far more than ours. It is true that the Philippines is a tropical climate, but there is nothing to show with any clear proof that Europeans can not live there without injury to health and beyond a doubt there are vast stretches of territory where the climate is not more detrimental than portions of our own land.

The islands have practically never been cultivated or explored as they now will be, and it is the judgment of careful experts that they are capable of magnificent development, and there is no reason why these people who are now possessed of little means—perhaps not the present generation, but their sons and daughters—should not acquire property, hold lands, accumulate fortunes, and be the equals of other people in happiness and prosperity.

We shall open their ports to the commerce of the world. They will have chances in life never heretofore dreamed of, and their men will be paid wages according to their worth. We are about undertaking the laying of cables to their shores, the building of a great canal, which, when finished, will bring them much closer to us, and the thousands of ships and steamers which will go through that canal, trading with the East, will find the Philippine Islands a convenient and desirable stopping place for trade and other purposes, and bring a golden harvest to the islands.

I firmly believe that within twenty-five years the city of Manila and adjacent towns and cities will have increased many times in population, and then there will be no finer sections of the eastern world than these same islands, which are now the subject of such bitter controversy.

No matter what we may be obliged to say in reference to the men of the Philippine Islands, it gives me pleasure—as I have not heard anyone in debate speak of the women—to state that all statistics prove that they are the superior of their husbands and brothers.

Statistics show that they make good wives and loving mothers, and that mostly they are faithful to their husbands and aid them in every possible manner in their work, both at home and in the field.

Polygamy does not exist largely in the islands, and usually the families are united and happy, showing as much affection for each other as do the European races. The old Spanish traditions prove that when they took possession of the islands the women occupied a higher station than they do now, and that even in those days the Filipinos generally had but one wife.

The women of the richer classes did no work, wore silk and costly clothing and jewelry of gold and precious stones, and were treated with the utmost respect. The women of the poorer classes occupied very much the same station as they do at present, being an aid and help to their husbands in all the walks of life. In fact, at the present moment a Filipino woman does far more than her share, the men really being inclined to laziness and indolence.

From all information that can be obtained it does not appear that the status of the Filipino woman has advanced, but rather deteriorated. Under our influence and well-known respect for women it is to be hoped that we shall build up a better condition and that our example will show to the Filipino men the necessity of taking on their shoulders a more active part in the domestic circle and support of the family, so far as pertains to actual manual labor at least.

There is a great field for work among these people by our missionaries and religious bodies generally, and if they take up the matter with energy and intelligence there is no question whatever but that most satisfactory results will be accomplished, and especially among the women and children.

The world has progressed and is progressing, and the prating views of the pessimists, who always oppose prosperity for their own people as well as for others, can not prevent it. For instance, fifty years ago, or even, perhaps, at a less period, it would have been impossible for European nations and ourselves to have acted in concert, as was done in China. The doctrine that a nation, simply because they wish to govern themselves and not have others govern them, can be allowed to murder each other, set up different governments every year, ill treat foreigners living among them, and violate every law of civilization is a theory which should be swept aside. Liberty is liberty only when it means what it says, and it is an open question to-day and one which might well be considered whether there are not other places in the world where the hand of civilization of some nation might not well step in and bring about peace to the inhabitants, also law and order.

As, for instance, Haiti and many sections of South America. Take the last-named great continent, and who will deny that if its various republics had been governed by their own people as they should have been during the past century they would not have made far greater strides in the advancement of their people and taken a more commanding station among the nations of the world and prosperity would have been tenfold what it is to-day? Many of those countries are subject to continual revolutions, the despotic power of ambitious men, and the cruelty of those who are in power to retain their hold on the reins of government against other ambitious persons who are stirring up strife with a view to their personal interest. I do not bring this point up for a moment to have it understood that this country should in any wise interest itself wrongly in any way against any existing South American republic, but rather that we should protect them against others, yet at the same time the conditions that have prevailed in some portions of South America in the past and even at the present date are such as make men think that a proper insistence upon a better order of affairs would not be going beyond the province of the enlightened governments of the world, and this country should take a firmer stand for the rights of its citizens who trade and visit our southern neighbors.

Others have so thoroughly thrashed out the Army question that I shall propose to allude to that point with but few words. I would state that I uphold the Army and believe in the honor and humanity of most of its officers. The carping criticism and unjust comments of many speakers has shown that they were simply guided by personal feelings and politics, without regard to justice or looking at the matter from a broad standpoint. We unquestionably sent to those islands as fine a lot of men as ever wore the uniform of any country. They had to encounter methods employed by the Filipinos, who, beyond doubt, were cruel and treacherous. Real war did not exist, but a guerrilla warfare and nothing else; they were in a tropical land far from home, and undoubtedly many an officer has found himself in a most difficult position. He had the lives of his men to look after and care for. He was confronted by the treachery of those he had the right to think were his friends among the natives, and self-preservation is the first law of nature in such cases. At times measures were taken and cruelty shown which would not have been done under other circumstances, but individual cases ought not to call for unjust condemnation of the entire force.

Personally, I believe that many of the tales told have been vastly exaggerated. Many of the men who have bitterly spoken about certain incidents which have occurred would probably, if they had been in the places of the men they assailed and subjected to the same privations and difficulties, have been equally cruel or perhaps even far surpassed those they condemn. On the whole, the war, undoubtedly, so far as a warfare of that kind is concerned, has been handled with bravery on the part of our men, with self-abasement, and great judgment has been shown in the midst of their troubles. Individual cases that show clear infringement of the rights of warfare, or cases of unnecessary cruelty should be punished, and I trust the President and War Department to do it. In wars of the past there was no way of knowing of all the cruelties which were perpetrated, but now, owing to closer proximity, through the cable, quick steamers, reporters at the scenes of warfare, information of all kinds come to us and shock us, which in the past would never have been heard of. But again on this issue, I contend that the world has improved, and that every war that takes place, while cruel, still is waged more in accordance with a desire to avoid unnecessary suffering, and we are improving in that particular as well as in others.

Time will not allow me to go into any special criticism of the bill before us, and it is simply the framework for the government of these people and will have to be amended and added to from time to time. The great thing, however, will be to protect the natives by every manner of law that is possible in their rights. So far as the question of money is concerned, I believe that it is a great mistake to send out to them any mongrel coinage; nor do I believe that the proposed special silver dollar and half dollar for use in the islands and throughout the East will be efficient or satisfactory. It will probably fail the same as the trade dollar failed. We had far better give them the benefit of our own stable currency, both in gold and silver. They will soon learn, not only in the Philippines, but generally in the East, what our currency represents and the high standard of our money, and labor problems, the wage problem, purchase of goods, and the exchange question will all settle themselves more easily on this basis than in any other way.

Let us make the American eagle stamped on our gold and silver pieces known throughout the world and it will help us in many ways commercially. The English sovereign to-day is a passport wherever you go. Why should we not follow such a good example rather than adopt an uncertain policy, which will not be satisfactory in all probability, and make the change when it comes the more difficult of accomplishment?

The framers of the House bill have given it careful attention and studied all its provisions, and beyond the points mentioned, and adding I heartily favor having a native house of representatives, I defer to their judgment and am in favor of the passage of the measure. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I was astonished by the attack made upon the postal employees, and particularly on the letter carriers of the country, by the chairman of the Post-Office and Post-Roads Committee [Mr. LOUD]. The thought came to me at that time that if an opportunity presented itself something should be said in refutation of those statements. The time has come, in my opinion, when some one should tell the truth in respect to one who has been a consistent opponent of every effort to increase the wages of the postal employees, but who has just as persistently labored in behalf of the great railroad corporations who have been the beneficiaries of his acts.

I ask, Mr. Chairman, whether the letter carriers are being used as a shield behind which we find hidden the railroads of the country which are getting the lion's share of the appropriations annually made to carry on the work of the Post-Office Department? I ask why it is that this House continually accepts the report of the Committee on Post-Offices, made by its chairman, by which we are paying the railroads fully as much and more in rentals per year than it costs to build the cars which we are renting? May I further ask, if in order to keep this from the members of the House, and in order to throw sand in our eyes, the statement is being made that we must keep down expenses by restricting or resisting these assaults on the Treasury that are being made by the employees of the postal service, especially the letter carriers? May I ask whether this is a subterfuge merely, in order to keep from us the real issue, which is the payment of ten times as much for handling or carrying the mails as is paid for carrying express matter in the same cars, behind the same engines, on the same train, and over the same roadbed?

When the chairman of the Post-Office Committee took occasion to belittle the efforts of the letter carriers he only followed out his former tactics. Not only that, his remarks were in line with his attempts to reduce the price of labor, to lower the standards of wages, and to add to the profits of contractors, as we well remember was his aim when he desired to place the rural free-delivery service on a contract basis. Oh, this contract system must certainly be a grand one! It reminds me of the padrones, who hire boys and peddle them out and utilize their services for a mere pittance while they themselves grow rich. Has it come to a point where this country must require men to take civil-service examinations, to furnish bonds, and to do labor in order to be farmed out to contractors?

I believe that were a bill introduced in this House asking that the letter carriers be placed on the contract basis such bill would speedily be reported to the House and passed. But a just measure, the purpose of which is to give relief to a deserving body of men, is pigeon-holed simply because, under the rules, the chairman can take such action. Well and eloquently did the president of the carriers' organization plead with the committee to bring the bill into the House, or at least to make a report at this session, favorably or otherwise, for I know, as every member knows, that once brought into the House justice will be done and the bill passed.

But, no; it is the will of the chairman that such should not be done. It is not my purpose now to speak at length, or to touch largely upon the letter carriers' salary bill. I have done that heretofore, but I simply desire at this time to point out why it is, to my mind, that the efforts of the railway mail clerks, the post-office clerks, and the letter carriers are always being made the chief issue in this House by those who have charge of the work of the Post-Office Committee. In studying the situation, in looking over this matter, in weighing the question, I can arrive at no other conclusion than that it is intended as a sort of a yell of "stop thief," and thus keep the members of this House agitated on this question, while the chairman quietly sits back and fixes up the bills by which the railroads get enormous amounts of money from the public Treasury.

I want to say right here, Mr. Chairman, that were the Government to pay the railroads what is a fair price for handling mail in transit instead of the present exorbitant rates, which are fixed by action of this committee, under the advisement of its chairman—that were this done we could extend the postal service beyond anything that was ever dreamed of in this country. We could then pay the employees decent wages. We would then not be treated to the spectacle of having to compare their salaries with those of the poverty-ridden workers of the State of Pennsylvania, which is controlled from top to bottom by these very railroads who are getting these vast amounts of money on their mail contracts.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that were these rates that are being paid the railroads for carrying the mails fixed at a reasonable figure we could extend the free-delivery service to every hamlet, to every farmhouse, to every nook and corner of this country. Not only that, but 1-cent postage would then be reached. But no; for fear that we may examine into this matter and that we may accidentally discover what is the real drain on our Treasury, who is the real dog whose tail should be cut off behind the ears—yes, lest we might discover this, we are continually told to watch the postal clerks, to watch the railway-mail clerks, and to watch the letter carriers, for fear that they might impoverish us should we give them sufficient to allow them to live.

The thought struck me, in listening to the argument of my colleague from California [Mr. LOUD], that if substitutes earn $380 per year, where does this money come from? I believe—in fact, I know—that the money that substitutes earn is deducted from the salary of the regular carriers. If substitutes earn $380 per year, then the regular carriers must certainly be $380 per year short, except, perhaps, the small pittance which is allowed the substitutes by appropriation for serving the routes of regular carriers during the vacation period. I ask again, Why is it the gentleman from California, in comparing the salaries of carriers with those of other employees, takes on the one hand, every person who could be designated as an employee in a certain given industry—whether he happens to be a skilled mechanic or only a common laborer—and by adding them all together averages up their pay to bring it down to as low a figure as possible; while, on the other hand, in the carrier service he takes 20 of the largest cities and tries to show that the amount received by regulars or substitutes in these 20 large cities holds good from Maine to California?

Mr. Chairman, there are over 900 cities in the United States, and there are but 53 or 55 cities in which carriers receive nominally $1,000 per year, and in all the other 850 or more cities the maximum salary which any letter carrier can receive is $850. We have hundreds of post-offices which employ only 3 or 4 carriers each. If the substitute earns $380 in any of these offices, $280 must necessarily come from the 4 carriers in the office having that number, and $100 will be the amount that this substitute receives for serving routes during vacation. This would leave the salary or the income of the carriers in such an office about $775 or $780 per year.

From this they also buy their uniforms, which further reduces the net dollars and cents to which my worthy colleague from California is so prone to call attention. Every statement that he makes could be refuted, but I do not wish to take up the time of this body further than to show that it is not the letter carriers that we must fear—that it is not the salary that they receive or ask for that will bankrupt this country—but that it is the amount that is fixed annually by appropriations contained in the Post-Office bill to subsidize the railroads that is the real drain. Just as my colleague says, I ask you to study this question, to judge it calmly and dispassionately, and I believe that you will find that instead of attacking the letter carriers more good would come to this country and more money would be saved the Treasury if you would examine a little more closely into the methods that are pursued, not by the letter carriers, but by the railroads, who seem to get everything they want from the Post-Office Committee.

We do not hear of bills for railway mail contracts slumbering in the pigeon-holes of the committee. We do not hear any reference made to the amounts that are handed out annually on a platter in the form of subsidies. We hear little or no reference to such things. And why, Mr. Chairman, are these matters pushed through so quietly? Is it fear that should they be discussed that this House might examine a little more closely into this question and find that they are paying for something they do not get?

Let me say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that in the future I shall watch these matters more closely, and that when attacks are made on the workers in the ranks I will endeavor to ascertain who is the gentleman in the woodpile that you are protecting by throwing stones at some one on the outside. I serve notice here and now, Mr. Chairman, that the grasp which these corporations have on the country and on its resources will ere long be broken.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, this morning while the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL] was speaking on the subject of trusts I interrupted him with a question. He did not yield long enough to hear the whole of it, and seemed to think that it was not relevant. I proposed to ask him whether he had read the statement of Mr. Bryan, published in the Washington Post this morning, concerning the Democratic harmony dinner in New York last week, in the course of which he spoke of what was to be the policy of that party, using the following language:

Trusts are to be denounced in sonorous terms, while the campaign managers mortgage the party to the trust magnates in return for campaign funds.

One day last week the gentleman from Tennessee, the Democratic leader in the House, startled us with the information that there was greater harmony in the Democratic party than at any time within the past eight years.

He also declared that if asked the most dangerous factor in our affairs to-day he would name the trusts, which he proceeded to discuss at some length. A day or two later there was a general Democratic harmony banquet in New York. Mr. Bryan was not invited to speak and was not present. In a statement issued yesterday and published throughout the United States to-day he gives his views of the existing harmony and its relation to trusts. The article in full, as it appears in the Post this morning, is as follows:

READ OUT BY BRYAN—DOORS OF DEMOCRACY CLOSED TO CLEVELAND AND HILL—HARMONY PLAN SCORNED—DECLARES IT WOULD MEAN A RETURN TO EX-PRESIDENT'S POLICIES—REORGANIZERS CHARGED WITH SCHEMING TO REGAIN CONTROL OF THE PARTY IN THE INTEREST OF THE "PLUTOCRATIC ELEMENTS," WHICH, SAYS BRYAN, DOMINATED THE SECOND ADMINISTRATION OF PRESIDENT CLEVELAND—HILL STILL MORE TO BE FEARED THAN GROVER.

LINCOLN, NEBR., June 23, 1902.

The absence of W. J. Bryan from the Democratic harmony dinner at New York is pretty well explained by a statement given out by Mr. Bryan this evening, commenting on the dinner. At the outset Mr. Bryan says there is no such thing as Democratic harmony where former President Cleveland is concerned. He says:

"The banquet given on the evening of June 19 by the Tilden Club, of New York City, was advertised as a 'harmony meeting,' but it turned out to be what might have been expected of such a gathering, an ovation to the chief guest, former Democrat Grover Cleveland. There can be no such thing as harmony between men like him and those who believe in Democratic principles, and he is frank enough to say so. He spent no time looking for 'middle ground' upon which to gather together discordant elements. He boldly called upon the members of the party to abandon their convictions and accept the construction which he placed upon Democratic principles. He even taunted the party with being a sort of prodigal son, and invited it to give up its diet of husks and return to its father's house.

INTERPRETING CLEVELAND'S WORDS.

He spoke of his "retirement from political activity," and said: "Perhaps there are those who would define my position as one of banishment instead of retirement. Against this I shall not enter a protest. It is sufficient for me in either case that I have followed on the matters of difference within our party the teachings and counsel of the great Democrat in whose name party peace and harmony are to-night invoked. No confession of party sin should therefore be expected of me. I have none to make, nor do I crave political absolution."

He not only boasted of his course, but put his brand upon those who sat at meat with him. Having asserted that his Democratic faith compelled him to leave the party (or resulted in his banishment), he descried the banqueters as sharing in that faith.

He is not only defiant, but he insists that party success can be secured only by an open and avowed return to his ideas. Harmony is to be secured, not by the suppression of differences, but by the elimination of those who differ from him.

Mr. Bryan says he will print in his paper Mr. Cleveland's speech "to show that the organizers do not want harmony, but control, and that their control means the abandonment of the party's position and a return to the policies and practices of Mr. Cleveland's second Administration." He continues:

THE SECOND ADMINISTRATION.

"He (Cleveland) secured his nomination in 1892 by a secret bargain with the financiers. His committee collected from the corporations and spent the largest campaign fund the party ever had. He filled his Cabinet with corporation agents and placed railroad attorneys on the United States bench to look after the interests of their former clients. He turned the Treasury over to a Wall street syndicate, and the financial member of his official family went from Washington to become the private attorney of the man who forced (?) the Treasury Department to sell him Government bonds at 105 and then resold them at 117. He tried to prevent the adoption of the income-tax provision. He refused to sign the only tariff-reform measure passed since the war, and, while thundering against the trusts in his message, did even less than Knox has done to interfere with their high-handed methods.

"His Administration, instead of being a fountain of Democracy, sending forth pure and refreshing streams, became a stagnant pool, from whose waters foul vapors arose, poisonous to those who lingered near.

"Having debauched his party, he was offended by its effort to reform and gave comfort to the enemy. Virginius killed his daughter to save her chastity; Cleveland stabbed his party to prevent its return to the paths of virtue.

"And now, still gloating over his political crimes, he invites the party to return to him and apologize for the contempt which it has expressed for him. Will it? Not until the principles of Jefferson are forgotten and the works of Jackson cease to inspire.

CLEVELAND THE LOGICAL CANDIDATE.

"If we are to have reorganization, Cleveland himself should accept the Presidential nomination. It would be due him. His reinstatement would be poetic justice to him and retribution to those whose Democratic conscience revolted against his undemocratic conduct. Of course he would get no Democratic votes, but being closer to plutocracy than any Republican likely to be nominated he might divide the enemy, and even Democrats would have what little consolation would come from receiving their disappointment in advance.

"A merchant, about to fail, invited his creditors to a dinner, and, after stating his condition, secured a year's extension from all present. One of the number, a relative, waited until after the others had retired, and then accosted the debtor: 'Of course I promised with the rest to extend the time, but you are going to make me a preferred creditor, are you not?' 'Yes,' replied the debtor, 'I'll make you a preferred creditor. I'll tell you now that you are not going to get anything; the rest won't find it out for a year.' Mr. Cleveland's nomination would have this advantage over the nomination of any other reorganizer; he would make the Democrats preferred creditors and tell them that they would not be benefited by his administration.

"Mr. Cleveland's speech should be read in full. It answers a useful purpose; it outlines the plan of campaign decided upon by the plutocratic elements, for which the reorganizers stand. Tariff reform is to be made the chief issue, and the men who voted for McKinley, the high priest of protection, are to carry on a sham battle with their companions of 1896, while the financiers make the dollar redeemable in gold and fasten upon the country an asset currency and a branch bank system.

"Trusts are to be denounced in sonorous terms, while the campaign managers mortgage the party to the trust magnates in return for campaign funds. Sometimes imperialism will be denounced, as in Mr. Hopkins's Illinois convention; sometimes ignored, as in Mr. Cleveland's speech, but whether denounced or ignored, the secret and silent power that can compel submission to the demands of the financiers and to the demands of the trust magnates can compel submission to the demands of the exploiters and the representatives of militarism.

"The fight is on between a Democracy that means democracy and a Clevelandism which means plutocracy. Every speech made by Mr. Cleveland shows more clearly the odiousness of the policies for which he stands. We have more to fear from those who, like Mr. Hill, indorse Mr. Cleveland's views, but conceal their real purpose in ambiguous language."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. That is not in accordance with the rules. Debate must be confined to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been held, the Chair thinks, that debate must be confined to the pending bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is right, and I have no objection to that. I have objection to the rule being violated.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I will say no more upon the subject, but will extend my remarks in the RECORD, including the entire article as published in this morning's Washington Post.

Mr. SULZER. I object.

Mr. OLMSTED. You may object, gentlemen, but the rule permits me to do that.

Mr. COCHRAN. I make the point of order that it does not. The gentleman's remarks are not relevant to the matter before the House, and I shall object. The gentleman can not extend disorderly remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LESSLER. That is the same point of order that was made against the speech of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL].

Mr. COCHRAN. It has been held that a different rule prevailed in the daytime discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not for the Chair to determine in Committee of the Whole as to what shall go into the RECORD.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not object to anything going into the RECORD, only I made the point of order that the gentleman could not address the House in the way he did. I do not care to make objection to anything going into the RECORD. If the gentleman's remarks are held in order, of course he can extend them. If they are out of order, he can not extend them.

Mr. OLMSTED. I make the point of order that, the hour of 10.30 having arrived, it is time for the committee to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is well taken. The hour of 10.30 having arrived, the committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. ALLEN of Maine having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. ESCH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of affairs of government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then (at 10.30 p. m.) the House, pursuant to the special order, adjourned until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7956) providing additional districts for the recording of all instruments required by law to be recorded in the Indian Territory, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2660); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LANHAM, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15140) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the fifth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Fort Worth, in the State of Texas, on the first Monday in November in each year, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2661); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ZENOR, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14305) making an appropriation for the support of the W. T. Whitaker Orphan Home, in the Indian Territory, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2662); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 203) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point, Arturo R. Calvo, of Costa Rica, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2663); which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MARSHALL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 5356) to establish an Indian agricultural school at or near the city of Wahpeton, in the State of North Dakota, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2664); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13404) fixing the punishment for the larceny of horses, cattle, and other live stock in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2665); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15201) to allot the lands of the Cherokee tribe of Indians in Indian Territory, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2666); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. 113) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cannon for a monument to the soldiers of Worcester County, Mass., who served in the war for the Union, to be surmounted by an equestrian statue of the late Maj. Gen. Charles Devens, United States Volunteers, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2670); which said resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ALEXANDER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14839) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the fifth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, on the first Monday in September in each year, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2671); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BURNETT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 180) granting certain lands belonging to the United States and situated in the State of Alabama to the State of Alabama for the use and benefit of the common schools of that State, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2672); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BURTON, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 205) providing for the removal of shoal in North River of New York Harbor, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2674); which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15234) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1902, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2675); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4437) granting a pension to Absalom Case, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2667); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14938) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Wilson, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 2668); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RUMPLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5167) granting an increase of pension to John G. Nowman, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2669); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. NORTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4623) granting an increase of pension to Lewis F. Ross, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2673); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SHATTUC: A bill (H. R. 15235) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. PIERCE: A bill (H. R. 15236) establishing a United States court at Bristow, Ind. T.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McDERMOTT: A bill (H. R. 15237) concerning pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany House bill for the relief of the heirs of C. H. Foy—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 25, 1902.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. TELLER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

CLAIM OF THE STATE OF VERMONT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, the claim of the State of Vermont, amounting to $291,408.56, allowed by the Auditor for the War Department, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CHINESE EXCLUSION LAW.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Acting Commissioner-General of Immigration, submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for the enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion act for the fiscal year 1902, $15,000; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CUSTOMS REVENUE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate in the sum of $150,000, additional appropriation for expenses of collecting revenue from customs for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LIST OF JUDGMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 23d instant, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims not heretofore reported to Congress; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation required by the several departments of Congress to complete the services of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for prior years, amounting to $22,554.11, and for the postal service, payable from customs revenues, amounting to $224.64; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LIST OF CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, schedules of claims amounting to $57,333.56 allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On yesterday the Chair laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 23d instant, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredation cases requiring an appropriation by Congress, and ordered that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations without printing. The Chair suggests that the communication had better be printed, and if there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the second report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13213) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 182) authorizing the Director of the Census to compile statistics relating to irrigation; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the message of the Senate disagreeing to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4284) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, and asking a conference with the House thereon.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12804) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, further insists upon its amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, recedes from its adherence to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agrees to the same with amendments; in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1026) to fix the compensation of district superintendents in the Life Saving Service;

A bill (S. 3375) relating to the construction of a dam across Rainy River;

A bill (S. 3746) to amend section 2593 of the Revised Statutes, relating to ports of entry;

A bill (S. 6178) to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act to provide for a permanent Census Office," approved March 6, 1902;

A bill (H. R. 2063) amending an act creating the middle district of Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. 2066) to change the terms of the district court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania; and

A bill (H. R. 8840) granting an increase of pension to John H. Lauchly.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented a petition of South Bend Lodge, No. 218, International Association of Machinists, of South Bend, Ind., praying for the passage of the so-called eight hour-bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BURROWS presented a petition of Wayne Lodge, No. 508, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the irrigation and reclamation of the arid lands of the West; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Amasa B. Watson Post, Department of Michigan, Grand Army of the Republic, of Grand Rapids, and of Phil Sheridan Post, No. 4, Department of Michigan, Grand Army of the Republic, of Reading, in the State of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation to modify and simplify the pension laws; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented petitions of Muskegon Lodge, No. 170, of Muskegon; of Twin City Lodge, No. 475, of St. Joseph; of Ionia Lodge, No. 385; of Detroit Lodge, No. 82, of Detroit; of Kalamazoo Lodge, No. 429, of Kalamazoo, all of the International Association of Machinists; of Iron Molders' Local Union No. 225, of Lansing; of the Pattern Makers' Association of Grand Rapids; of Iron Molders' Local Union No. 104, of Albion; of the Pattern Makers' Association of Detroit, and of the Twin City Trades and Labor Assembly, of Benton Harbor, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SPOONER presented petitions of the Milwaukee Association of Methodist Ministers, of Milwaukee; of the congregations of the Baptist, Christian, Methodist, Episcopal, Presbyterian, and United Brethren churches of Richland Center, all in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of a Sunday rest law for the District of Columbia; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of Oscar Strand and 30 other citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the internal-revenue law relative to the tax on distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Wisconsin Sunday Rest Day Association, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Soldiers' Homes and at immigrant stations; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the common council of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation granting pensions to certain officers and enlisted men in the Life-Saving Service; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENROSE presented a petition of 43 citizens of Carbondale, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 2,674 citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the internal-revenue law relative to the tax on distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

STATE CLAIMS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent to have an opinion of the Comptroller of the Currency in regard to State claims for expenses incurred in enrolling, equipping, paying, and transporting troops employed in suppressing the war of the rebellion printed as a separate document, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and the opinion will be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15108) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for prior years, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and to submit a report thereon. I give notice that I shall call the bill up for consideration either late this afternoon or the first thing to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4611) to authorize the West Elizabeth and Dravosburg Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6232) for the relief of I. I. Barber, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. QUAY submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 5956) to provide for the allotment of lands of the Cherokee Nation, for the disposition of town sites therein, and for other purposes, heretofore reported by him.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2160) for the relief of Hyland C. Kirk and others, assignees of Addison C. Fletcher, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

NATIONAL APPALACHIAN FOREST RESERVE.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I move that the bill (S. 492) for the purchase of a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian Mountains, which was reported by me on February 5 last and is now on the Calendar, be indefinitely postponed. The bill (S. 5228) for the purchase of a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian Mountains, to be known as the "National Appalachian Forest Reserve," which was reported some time ago from the Committee on Forest Reservations and Protection of Game, as a substitute for the bill reported by me from the same committee, was passed yesterday by the Senate. The substitute is identically the same bill as the one reported by me with the exception that it provides for certain machinery necessary for carrying out the purposes of the bill reported by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina moves that Senate bill No. 492 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 6282) granting an increase of pension to Jane A. Ward; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 6283) granting an increase of pension to George W. Ellis; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DILLINGHAM introduced a bill (S. 6284) to amend the act of August 8, 1888, 25 Statutes at Large, chapter 787; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BARD introduced a bill (S. 6286) prohibiting the killing or taking of seals, porpoises, whales, or marine animals, or fish of any kind in the waters of the United States by means of explosive materials, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 6285) to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of Philadelphia, by dumping or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to say, Mr. President and Mr. Chairman of the Committee on Commerce, that this bill is an exact transcript of the law relating to the harbor of New York. It has been prepared and forwarded by the Maritime Exchange of Philadelphia, and it is exceedingly desirable that it should be passed through both branches before the adjournment of Congress. I should be very glad if the Committee on Commerce would act upon it promptly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO THE DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing to revive and continue in force section 2 of the deficiency appropriation act approved May 18, 1872, relative to the performance of all labor in excess of eight hours per day, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment, proposing to appropriate $1,500 to pay Sadie Thome, widow of S. W. Thome, who lost his life March 19, 1897, while United States consul at Asuncion, Paraguay, South America, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS IN MINNESOTA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 4284) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate reconsider the votes by which the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House and sent the bill to conference.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I now move to concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 182) authorizing the Director of the Census to compile statistics relating to irrigation was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Census.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 23d instant approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. 282) providing for the appointment of James W. Long, late a captain, United States Army, a captain of infantry, and for placing his name on the retired list; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 100) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish condemned cannon for an equestrian statue of the late Maj. Gen. William J. Sewell, United States Volunteers.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 24th instant approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. 5906) declaring the Osage River to be not a navigable stream above the point where the line between the counties of Benton and St. Clair crosses said river; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 92) providing for the publication of 200,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I would be pleased to have laid before the Senate a resolution offered by me yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania for a statement.

OKLAHOMA, ARIZONA, AND NEW MEXICO.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to mention, Mr. President, in connection with the notice I gave yesterday that hereafter no business should proceed in the Senate by unanimous consent while I was present in the Senate, that I have no desire, nor have the majority of the Senate, who are with me upon this subject, any desire, nor have the minority of the Committee on Territories any desire, if it can be at all avoided, to interfere with the ordinary conduct of business and a speedy adjournment. We desire nothing from the majority of the Committee on Territories except some assurance of a day in court. It matters not to us if the committee will report the statehood bill at this session negatively, or without recommendation, or favorably. I appeal to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] to say whether that can be done at the present session.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, as I stated the other day, the majority of the committee have already taken affirmative action looking to a consideration and report on the bill at an early day at the next session, and that resolution was made by the majority of the committee in perfect good faith. If what the Senator means is the fixing of a definite time early in the next session, I am willing to say that the committee will report on the bills now before it on the third day of the next session, if that is satisfactory to the Senator.

Mr. QUAY. That is satisfactory so far as I am concerned, and I speak for at least the Republicans who are disposed to vote with me to discharge the committee. It will be satisfactory to all, I think, and I will withdraw my motion, if there is connected with it the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill on the 10th of December and make it the special order until disposed of.

Mr. ALDRICH. To make it the regular order, not a special order.

Mr. QUAY. Making it the regular order until disposed of.

Mr. BERRY. Making it the unfinished business.

Mr. QUAY. Making it the unfinished business until disposed of. The idea is to give it the right of way until we get rid of it. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to that arrangement, that it be made the unfinished business, and with that understanding I will withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana has stated in open Senate that the Committee on Territories will report on the bill referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania on the third day of the next session.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thereupon the Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that on the 10th day of December——

Mr. QUAY. If the Senate is not in session on the 10th, then on the next session of the Senate thereafter.

Mr. BATE. That is on Wednesday.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senate will be in session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senate is in session on that day, and if not the next day following when it is in session, the bill reported shall be made the unfinished business.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, in reply to what was said by the Senator from Pennsylvania, as he seems to speak for the other side of the Chamber, I desire to say for the Democrats on this side of of the Chamber, and I feel authorized to do so—that we are a unit in favor of the bill and desire immediate action if we could get it. Now, it seems that we can not get immediate action, and failing in that, I hope the proposition of the Senator from Pennsylvania will be accepted. I am upon that Committee on Territories, being the first named among the Democrats upon it, and I feel that I can, with both propriety and authority, speak for them in this behalf. Therefore we accept the proposition, as we can get no vote on the bill this session. I repeat, that every Democrat in the Senate favors immediate admission into statehood of the Territories of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico, and regret we can not get immediate action on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I intend, so far as I am concerned, to consent, but I consent, as one member of the Senate, because I think it is a fair proposition that a time should be fixed for considering the bill and not at all in view of the threat of the Senator that if this consent be not given the business of the Senate will be interfered with during the session. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not put it in that way.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from Pennsylvania did not put it in that way. I did give notice that I would insist upon taking up the bill and at the proper time would use all parliamentary rights to secure a vote on it. That was the notice yesterday. It was simply fairly and openly made in the Senate, that I would do what was done yesterday under the eyes of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I was not referring to what the Senator said yesterday, but I referred to what he said a moment ago.

Mr. QUAY. I certainly conveyed no threat, but simply asked unanimous consent to consider the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has the agreement been made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not. The Chair has been requested to restate it, and will state it again.

The Senator from Indiana, the chairman of the Committee on Territories, has stated in open Senate to-day that the committee will report on the Territorial bill, so called, on the third day of the next session of Congress. Thereupon the Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that on the tenth day, if the Senate is in session, and on the first day thereafter it may be in session if not on the tenth, the bill shall be made the unfinished business.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

Mr. QUAY. Now, Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania withdraws his motion.

Mr. QUAY. The motion is withdrawn.

CUBAN RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, the Secretary of War, under the impression that the Committee on Relations with Cuba was still charged with the duty of investigating and reporting to the Senate an itemized statement of the receipts and expenditures in Cuba during the military occupation, has forwarded to me as chairman of that committee a detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures aforesaid during the months of May and June, 1900. That committee had already furnished to the Senate such a statement up to the 30th of April, 1900. This covers two additional months, May and June, and has been prepared by the Secretary of War. But as the committee is no longer charged with that duty, I present the statement to the Senate and ask that it may be referred to the committee and ordered printed. I am not sure whether that motion can be adopted or whether it should be referred to the Committee on Printing for its report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that it is necessary to go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no objection is made, it can be referred to the Senator's committee, and its printing will be ordered if there be no objection.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to ask the chairman a question. When was this statement received by the chairman?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. A few days ago; perhaps a week ago. I ought to have presented it earlier, but I omitted it because there was some matter——

Mr. MONEY. This I understand is detailed information which, by resolution of the Senate, was called for in April, 1900, over two years ago?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes; but that call embraced only the time to April 30, 1900. This is now a statement of two additional months that has been voluntarily sent by the Secretary of War to me as chairman of the committee, and he is still engaged in the preparation of the whole account up to the time of our evacuation. This is the first installment of it.

Mr. MONEY. If it takes the Department two years to present the information to that time, I do not know whether we will live to be old enough to get the conclusion of the business.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the Senator will permit me, I think he was not in the Senate the other day when, a resolution having been presented by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] calling upon the Secretary of War for this information, I said the Secretary had already commenced to prepare and furnish the information which was called for in that resolution. This is a part of what he has voluntarily done.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to have some further information on that point. Is it proposed under the resolution that the Department shall continue to furnish the information of the expenditures up to the 20th of May?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I did not quite understand the Senator, but I will state——

Mr. MONEY. I will endeavor to make myself clear. I should like to ask the Senator if the Department proposes to furnish up to the date of the evacuation, the 20th of May, a detailed statement such as was required by the resolution of April, 1900?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Department does intend to furnish a complete itemized statement of receipts and expenditures up to the 20th of May of this year, when we surrendered the occupation of the island to its Government. It is now engaged in that business and has a large force of clerks employed upon it. Of course, it is very voluminous matter and it will take some time to complete it. This is the first installment of that information.

Mr. MONEY. Now, as I understand from the Senator, this is a voluntary offer of the Secretary of War, not in obedience to any requirement made by the Senate for information in April, 1900, I believe. I should like to inquire whether we are to have all the other detailed information, the orders both general and special made by the military governor of Cuba up to May 20. If not, then I desire to introduce a resolution requesting the Secretary of War to furnish it. But perhaps that will be unnecessary, if the Senator can tell me whether it is contemplated that it shall be included in the report.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think it is contemplated that that should be included in this report. All those orders, I think, are in print in the Secretary's office. The Secretary of War would, doubtless, be very glad to send them to the Senate, if he was called upon for that purpose. If the Senator will introduce a resolution to that effect, I have no doubt it will be passed without objection and will be complied with at no distant day.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question. I understand the resolution introduced the other day by the Senator from Colorado was confined to disbursements made by the military governor with reference to the question of reciprocity, and consequently I ask the Senator from Connecticut if an answer to that resolution is included in this report which he makes now?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No; I presume not, because it occurred after the time to which these accounts relate.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator if it is contemplated that that resolution shall be answered? What has become of the resolution?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not know exactly the form of the resolution of the Senator from Colorado. He has it in his hand.

Mr. TELLER. I have it here. Shall I read it?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. This is the resolution that I offered:

Whereas it seems impracticable to prepare during this session of Congress an itemized statement showing the collection and disbursement of all funds for the whole period of the military occupation of Cuba; and

Whereas it is important that a statement be now made of the accounts hereafter named: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate the following:

A full itemized statement of all payments made out of Cuban funds to any persons or corporations, if any, for the purpose of promoting "reciprocity" between the United States and Cuba, at any time during the military occupation of Cuba by the United States, and whether such payments were authorized or approved by the Secretary of War.

The Senator from Connecticut objected to that, and it went over. The Senator from Connecticut stated to me that he had called upon the Department for that information, as I understood him, and said that I could let my resolution lie over or pass it. I did not see any object in passing it if the information was going to be furnished, so I let it lie on the table subject to my call. I understand the Senator has not yet received a reply to it.

Mr. CULBERSON. My inquiry, in view of the Senator's statement, was whether or not there was an answer to this particular resolution, because the Senator from Connecticut referred to that resolution, in the statement which was made by the Secretary of War. If the Senator from Connecticut proposes to have that resolution answered without being adopted or to furnish the information suggested by it, that is entirely satisfactory to me, of course, if it is to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think perhaps I was in error in saying that the Senator from Colorado introduced a resolution calling for itemized accounts of receipts and expenditures.

Mr. TELLER. No, I did not.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think that resolution was introduced by the Senator from Texas, was it not?

Mr. CULBERSON. I did introduce a general resolution some weeks ago.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This installment is more in reply to the information required by the Senator from Texas than in reply to the information called for in the resolution of the Senator from Colorado. I stated to the Senator from Colorado that I had called upon the Secretary of War for the information contemplated in his resolution and that he told me the vouchers were all in Cuba, and he had telegraphed to the officer—I think his name was Steiniert—who was left in charge of those accounts to send all the vouchers here. I have heard nothing about it since that time. I will say furthermore that I understand a resolution has been passed in the House of Representatives calling for the information which the Senator from Colorado desires. If he wishes to pass his resolution now I have no possible objection to it.

Mr. TELLER. I understand there was a resolution passed by the House, and I do not care about calling up the resolution at this particular time. I think I shall call it up, but I should like to wait. For the present I desire that it may lie on the table just as it is, subject to my call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the papers presented by the Senator from Connecticut will be referred to the Committee on Relations with Cuba and printed.

NEW MEXICO, OKLAHOMA, AND ARIZONA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer a resolution for reference to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. I had expected to offer it when the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] was disposed of; and now that an agreement has been reached, I offer it.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be, and it hereby is, authorized to sit during the recess of the Senate, at such times and places as it may desire, for the purpose of considering bills for the admission of the Territories of New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Arizona to statehood, and to send for persons and papers, take testimony, and employ a stenographer, and that the expenses incurred shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

CHEROKEE INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to ask unanimous consent that on Friday, after the routine morning business, Senate bill No. 5956 shall be taken up and considered. It is a bill for the allotment of the lands of the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. HALE. Not to interfere with appropriation bills?

Mr. QUAY. Oh, certainly; not to interfere with appropriation bills. If any explanation is desired, I have to say that it is a bill to authorize or legalize an agreement with the Cherokee Nation. Agreements were made in 1901 with all the Five Civilized Tribes. They were all voted upon. The Cherokee Nation voted down the agreement submitted to them. An agreement has now been arrived at, indorsed by the Cherokees, by the Department of the Interior, and by the Dawes Commission, which it is necessary should pass both branches of Congress before the adjournment. It ought to be ratified immediately by the Cherokees, as provision is made in it for ratification within the next forty days, matters in the Cherokee Nation being in a very chaotic and depressing condition.

Mr. SPOONER. I will ask the Senator if it is likely to be a contested case?

Mr. QUAY. I think not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that next Friday, after the completion of the routine morning business, the bill indicated by him shall be taken up for consideration, not, however, to interfere with conference reports or appropriation bills. The Secretary will read the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5956) to provide for the allotment of the lands of the Cherokee Nation, for the disposition of town sites therein, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the request? Is it to be continuing?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is that the bill shall be taken up immediately following the conclusion of the routine morning business on Friday next for consideration, not to interfere with conference reports or appropriation bills.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to examine that bill before it is taken up, and I shall object for the present, at least.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas objects.

Mr. BAILEY subsequently said: Mr. President, a few moments ago when the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] asked for unanimous consent that the bill (S. 5956) to provide for the allotment of the lands of the Cherokee Nation, for the disposition of town sites therein, and for other purposes, be made the special order for Friday next, I objected until I could examine the bill. I find that it is exceedingly desirable that the bill shall be considered and passed. It is doubtful whether I shall have time today to examine it as closely as I should wish, but I do not desire to interfere with its consideration, and therefore I withdraw my objection and trust that I may be able to examine the bill between this time and the time proposed to be fixed for its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request heretofore submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill just referred to by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] after the completion of the morning business on Friday next, not, however, to interfere with appropriation bills or conference reports?

Mr. ALDRICH. And for that day only.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] adds "and for that day only."

Mr. ALDRICH. I have been insisting upon that provision in all such agreements. It must be very evident to the Senate that we can not possibly agree to these unanimous consents without some agreement as to the time of consideration at this stage of the session, unless we want to give the entire time to some one measure, and I assume that is not our purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] with the addition suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] "and for that day only."

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I do not intend to object if I can get the information I want in regard to the bills known as pure-food bills, which I supposed were to be heard and determined. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Manufactures if the request for unanimous consent will take precedence over the pure-food bills reported by the Committee on Manufactures?

Mr. MCCUMBER. There has been no time fixed for the vote upon the pure-food bill. It is up for discussion this morning, with the agreement or understanding that it shall not be pressed to a final vote. That is the only arrangement that has been made.

Mr. MASON. Then, Mr. President, I feel constrained to object. I should like to have some arrangement made which will provide for a vote upon this matter of pure-food legislation, which has been reported for months.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] objects.

Mr. QUAY subsequently said: Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania for the purpose of making a request.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to renew my request to take up Senate bill 5956 on Friday after the routine morning business, the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Illinois having withdrawn their objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that on Friday morning, immediately after the completion of the routine morning business, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 5956) to provide for the allotment of the lands of the Cherokee Nation, for the disposition of town sites therein, and for other purposes, not to interfere with appropriation bills or conference reports.

Mr. QUAY. And the order to be made but for one day, in accordance with the agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to be made for one day only. Is there objection?

Mr. TILLMAN. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania made the same request this morning, and the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] objected.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from Texas has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. TILLMAN. If he has withdrawn it, all right, but I observe that he is not at this moment in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire, with the permission of the Senator from New Hampshire, to ask for the present consideration of House bill 12764. It is an important bill for the public generally, and it is a short bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator give me assurance that it will not lead to prolonged debate? One or two Senators—I think two Senators—have suggested to me that the bill will be debated at some length.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the bill? I ask that the title may be read.

Mr. PETTUS. It is a bill granting appeals from the Spanish court of claims.

Mr. HALE. Appeals where?

Mr. COCKRELL. To the Supreme Court.

Mr. BATE. To the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. PETTUS. On law questions.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I am opposed to that bill, and I shall have to object to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota objects to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rose to address myself to the resolution I offered yesterday, and I presumed that under the custom, if not the rules of the Senate, I would have the right to proceed, but I notice by the Calendar that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] gave notice that he would ask this morning, after the routine morning business, for the consideration of Senate bill 3342, which has been under consideration two or three times. The Senator assures me that what he expects to accomplish this morning will not occupy more than half an hour, and, with the understanding that I will be permitted to proceed when the Senator from North Dakota concludes, I will yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the Senator from North Dakota to yield to me for the introduction of a resolution for present consideration, which I think will not take a minute. If there is any objection, I will withdraw it.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I yield, with pleasure.

ORDERS OF GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF CUBA.

Mr. MONEY. I offer a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the honorable Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate at his earliest convenience copies of all orders, general and special, issued by the governor-general of Cuba from date of the beginning of his administration up to May 20, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SPOONER. Let it go over.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that perhaps he ought to specify more particularly both military orders and civil orders. I make that suggestion.

Mr. MONEY. I mention all orders, general and special. If that is the only objection I will amend by inserting "civil and military." But I thought the phraseology covered everything.

Mr. SPOONER. Let it go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over.

HAWAIIAN INVESTIGATION.

Mr. JONES of Nevada. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] on the 13th instant, to report it favorably without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate, inquire into, and ascertain the general condition of the islands of Hawaii, the administration of the affairs thereof, the area, condition, quality, and value of the public lands, the leasing, selling, or disposing thereof, and to make such recommendations as may be deemed necessary; to investigate and ascertain the area, condition, quality, and value of the crown lands, the rents, issues, or other revenues or proceeds received therefrom since January 17, 1893; whether or not the former queen of said islands now possesses any legal or equitable right, title, or interest in or to the same; the granting of franchises or other privileges, the question of immigration, the condition of labor therein, and to inquire into and report upon all other necessary matters pertaining to the executive, legislative, judicial, educational, tax, school, financial, and other systems thereof.

For the purposes aforesaid said committee, or a subcommittee thereof appointed by the chairman, shall have power to send for persons and papers, to visit the islands, to administer oaths, to sit during the recess of Congress; and said committee shall report at the beginning of the next session of Congress the result of its investigations, the expenses of said investigation to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALDRICH. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. PRITCHARD on the 23d instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time, as may be necessary, to report such testimony as may be taken by the committee or its subcommittee in connection with bills pending before it, and to have the same printed for its use, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

FOOD ADULTERATION, ETC.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3342) for preventing the adulteration, misbranding, and imitation of foods, beverages, candies, drugs, and condiments in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and for regulating interstate traffic therein, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, when we had this bill last under consideration I was attempting to answer some of the objections urged on the part of the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Arkansas. I was stopped by reason of the limitation of time. I wish now to complete my remarks upon the bill and to answer, as I believe I can, fully the objections which have been urged by both of those Senators, as well as to give some new light upon the questions that were asked by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. President, I ask for this bill, coming as it does with the unanimous report of the Committee on Manufactures, without any objection from a single member of that committee, and after very full and thorough consideration by that committee, the candid and honest consideration which a report of that kind seems to me to demand.

This is not a political question, Mr. President, in any sense whatever. The bill was considered by this committee with a view to eliminating every possible charge or claim that it might in any way possibly interfere with the police powers of the States. I believe that the efforts of the committee in that line have been eminently successful and that no valid objection can be urged against the bill upon that ground only. Of course I can not and will not attempt to answer any inherited prejudice, a prejudice which will be aimed at the right of the Government to determine what is interstate commerce and to regulate that interstate commerce. I shall not attempt to answer arguments which will deny the force and effect of the judicial reasoning and the judicial decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States for the last forty years; but all other objections to this bill I believe can be successfully answered, and I shall be glad to reply to any arguments or any questions that may be propounded by those who are opposed to this bill.

We all know, Mr. President, that most stringent laws have been passed by the States for the purpose of protecting the inhabitants thereof against deleterious foods, adulterated foods, and misbranded foods. Every man in the Senate knows how ineffectual those laws have been, and he knows, if he has given the subject any consideration whatever, the reason for the ineffectiveness of those laws. From all those States comes practically the same complaint. They say that their efforts to prevent the dissemination and the consumption in their States of these fraudulent articles of food have been paralyzed because of the interstate provision of the Constitution of the United States. How can they protect against the introduction into their respective States of a misbranded or a fraudulent or a spurious article of food? How can they reach the evil when the State can not in any way reach the manufacturer of these products and when Congress, by reason of its inaction, stands back and practically, by a rule of judicial construction, insists that any article of food product, whether it be deleterious, whether it be misbranded, whether it be fraudulent or adulterated, shall, notwithstanding that fact, enter into the property of the State, and that Congress will protect it through its control over interstate commerce until it becomes lost in the great bulk of the food and other products of the State?

I say, Mr. President, that Congress is back of an objection against which the States are urging for some relief, and that is the objection to the introduction into the States of these spurious articles of food.

We all understand the judicial construction of that provision in our Constitution which says that Congress shall have control over interstate and foreign commerce; we understand what that construction means to the State. It has been decided that control over commerce means not only control over the moving of the articles constituting the commercial product, but also control over the article after it has entered the State and has gone out of the control of the shipper; control over it from the time that it enters the vehicle of transportation until it goes into another State. Did it stop there, Mr. President, the State might be able, possibly, to protect itself; but it does not. It goes further and holds that it shall protect that article of food, whether it be deleterious or otherwise, so long as it is in original packages.

It holds that the right to transport from one State to another includes the right also to sell in the State into which the article is transported in original unbroken packages until it becomes mingled with the general mass of property of the State; and then it says if the State authorities, after it has been scattered and mingled with the commercial property of the State, can get hold of it and then can prevent its consumption, well and good; but if they can not they have no power whatever over it.

Now, all of these States having pure-food laws appeal to Congress to close this gap which they can not control, so that they may protect themselves. Not only this, but their efforts in the last year have been supplemented by the prayer of the manufacturers themselves for relief against the divergent laws of the States. We all understand, Mr. President, that, even though two States have identically the same law upon their statute books, the courts have given those laws different constructions. When you take that fact into consideration, with the further fact that, in addition, they have many diverse laws, the honest manufacturer is placed in such a condition that he scarcely knows how to label his goods so as to sell them easily and freely in the different States. He has to take the hazard of a judicial construction, and even a construction not by a judicial tribunal, but by a person known in the law as the food commissioner of the State, which construction may be absolutely out of harmony with what a court may have decided in a like case. So he is hampered on all sides in all of these States by reason of these divergent laws.

Everyone knows, Mr. President, the absolute impossibility of any of these States enforcing their laws unless they have supplemental legislation by the Government of the United States; or if the Government of the United States will go far enough to say they will even enact a law so that the articles shall fall under the police power the moment they enter the State, then the State will have some shadow of relief, but so long as the Government stands back and says that these deleterious and spurious goods shall go into a State, and shall not only go into it, but the Government stands back and protects the manufacturer in the sale of those spurious goods in the State so long as they are in original unbroken packages, then so long the State must necessarily be without any relief whatever.

Mr. President, this bill would strike at the very root of the evil. Through the influence and through the machinery of the Agricultural Department we can trace the adulterated and the misbranded foods to the source of their manufacture. The moment we ascertain where they are manufactured the efforts of the Government can be directed against the manufacturer transporting those goods into another State, and when we have done that through the instrumentality of the Agricultural Department we have rendered unnecessary 95 per cent of all the State laws at the present time upon the subject of pure food, simply because 95 per cent of adulterated articles are not sold in the State in which they are produced, but are transported to some other State from the one in which they are manufactured.

It must not be forgotten, therefore, in the consideration of this bill that its object is to supplement the efforts of the States, and, Mr. President, it seems to me that we are going a great way, and any member of the Senate is going a great way in putting up his own individual judgment against the necessity of this character of legislation against the consensus of the combined judgment of the legislatures of two-thirds or three-fourths of the States in the United States. The very fact that those legislatures have passed their laws concerning the traffic in adulterated articles of food for the purpose of preventing it in their respective States, and the fact that they are urging this legislation by the Government of the United States, ought to be practically conclusive evidence to every Senator that there is a strong public demand for legislation of this class.

Mr. President, this bill has the hearty approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. There is not a Senator here who does not respect the Department of Agriculture more than ever before since we have had at its head the present Secretary. We know his sterling qualities; we know that he has never yet abused the trust which has been conferred upon him, and we have his past record to insure us that the future will be of like character. The Secretary of Agriculture, communicating with all of the commissioners of food products in the several States, certainly has an opportunity of ascertaining not only the necessity but the desire of the several States to have legislation of this character enacted, and he reports to us that $1,170,000,000 worth of adulterated products are sold in the United States every year. To be conservative, he divides the estimate which he received from the food commissioners in two. So I think we can safely say that he has been more than conservative, and that probably it would amount to at least $3,000,000,000 worth. He states also that the deleterious products in these adulterated foods will amount to 2 per cent, or $156,000,000 a year. The enormous sums that are mentioned here, it seems to me, ought to invite our serious attention to the necessity and propriety of legislation on this subject.

Mr. President, the objection of the Senator from Connecticut was that there was too much power in one man's hands. He assumes that the Secretary of Agriculture is to determine upon the matter of food products, that he is to fix standards absolutely, and that it is within his power to do so. I desire to call attention to section 7 of this bill, to show the Senate how erroneous is this conclusion. That section provides:

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to fix standards of food products when advisable, and to determine the wholesomeness or unwholesomeness of preservatives and other substances which are or may be added to foods, and to aid him in reaching just decisions in such matters he is authorized to call upon the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry—

There is one individual—and the chairman of the committee on food standards of the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists—

And I have stated in my previous remarks upon this subject who this person is and his eminent fitness for this position—and such physicians, not less than five, as the President of the United States shall select, three of whom shall be from the Medical Departments of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine-Hospital Service, and not less than five experts, to be selected by the Secretary of Agriculture by reason of their attainments in physiological chemistry, hygiene, commerce, and manufactures, to consider jointly the standards of all food products (within the meaning of this act), and to study the effect of the preservatives and other substances added to food products on the health of the consumer.

Instead of the Secretary of Agriculture having this wonderful authority, you will see that the question of food standards is in the hands of 13 or 14 individuals, each selected for his peculiar fitness in matters of hygiene, physiology, etc. So, it seems to me, that the objection answers itself. Can we say that any one of those persons who is to be appointed under this bill is not properly and eminently fit for the position and is not the best that could possibly be selected?

The Senator from Connecticut says that the Secretary of Agriculture can say that one kind of flour is better than another; that he can say that Pillsbury's is the best flour, is superior to any other character of flour manufactured, and that that would give an undue influence in favor of the sale of that character of flour. Mr. President, that is nothing more than the Secretary of Agriculture is doing to-day. He is passing daily upon subjects of this kind.

I have stated before, and I believe that I can reiterate the fact, that the Secretary of Agriculture, under the provisions of this bill, is not to determine the superiority of one grade of food product over another, but he is to determine, when the question is submitted to him, the ingredients of a certain character of food. He is to determine, when submitted to him, the question of the superiority of certain ingredients, so far as the human system is concerned, over other ingredients as articles of food, and nothing more than that.

In the matter of flour he may determine that flour containing a certain percentage of water, a certain percentage of lime, a certain percentage of carbon, a certain percentage of phosphates, a certain percentage of starch may be the best kind of flour, may be the most superior character of flour; and if anyone has a flour which will correspond with that, I see no reason why he should not receive the benefit of an analysis of this kind.

I believe that it has been determined by the Agricultural Department that Colorado sugar beets are superior in saccharine qualities to all other beets raised. I do not know but that is true; but I have not found that that has had any serious effect upon the beet-sugar industry in the State of Michigan. I believe that there is a consensus of opinion not only amongst the public, but amongst physicians, that beef as a product is more healthy than pork, but I have not found that that has had any serious or bad effect upon the consumption of pork in the United State or upon the market in pork products. Everyone fully understands that we demand for our table many kinds of products. Some may be superior to others. What we do wish is simply that we shall know what the products are that we are consuming and what those are that we are purchasing, and this bill seeks to assist us in that investigation.

But, reduced to its logical sequence, it seems to me that the argument of the Senator from Connecticut in objection to this bill would be that the truth obtained in any manner as to food products would be a detriment to those products which did not correspond with the highest class of goods so far as nutriment is concerned. I do not believe it would have any such effect as that, and I do not consider for a single moment that that would be an objection or would injure the sale of such goods.

We are already, Mr. President, making a study of food products in the Army; we are making a study of food products in the Navy. We have a physician in the Army and a physician in the Navy who are intrusted with that particular kind of work, and I should like to have any Senator give me any good reason why, if we should study a product for the purpose of benefiting our Navy or for the purpose of benefiting our soldiers, or for the purpose of benefiting the Army as well as the Navy, why the same rule would not apply to the public in general, or why the people of the United States should not have the same protection against wrongful, against impure, against adulterated food products that the Army and the Navy have.

Mr. President, it was not long ago generally understood that oatmeal, for instance, as a food product was one of the most nutritious and one of the best that could be possibly used. Upon that particular fad a great amount of oatmeal was consumed in the United States with the idea that it was an easily digested article of food. That particular fad, without any reason for its foundation, has perhaps cost the lives of hundreds of thousands of people with weak digestive organs. Had we in past years had a central committee, consisting of the Secretary of Agriculture, with the eminent scientists with whom we have surrounded him in this bill, much good would have been obtained by the public in disseminating the truth concerning this particular food.

Mr. President, if there should be a pure-food commission established anywhere it seems to me it should be rightly established in the Department of Agriculture, where we have all of the necessary machinery for carrying such a law into effect. But I wish to call attention to another fact, and I especially invite the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to this statement. He objected on the ground that the proposed law would give too great a power to the Department of Agriculture, and yet the same Senator voted but a short time ago for a law which gave the Secretary of Agriculture exactly all of these powers, but continued them, of course, only for the year ending June 30, 1903. I refer to the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903. This is public act No. 139, and on pages 12 and 13 we have these provisions, which will become the law of the United States on the 1st day of July, 1902:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the character of proposed food preservatives and coloring matters, to determine their relation to digestion and to health, and to establish the principles which should guide their use; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the character of the chemical and physical tests which are applied to American food products in foreign countries, and to inspect before shipment, when desired by the shippers or owners of these food products, American food products intended for countries where chemical and physical tests are required before said food products are allowed to be sold in the countries mentioned, and for all necessary expenses connected with such inspection and studies of methods of analysis in foreign countries; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in collaboration with the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists, and such other experts as he may deem necessary, to establish standards of purity for food products and to determine what are regarded as adulterations therein, for the guidance of the officials of the various States and of the courts of justice; for the preparation of reports, the purchase of apparatus, chemicals, samples, and supplies required in conducting such investigations, the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in conducting such experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collating, digesting, and reporting the results of such experiments; for freight and express charges, and for traveling and other necessary expenses, and for the rent of buildings occupied by the Bureau of Chemistry.

For these purposes a certain sum of money is appropriated.

There is not a single power contained in this pure-food bill that is not already a law, having passed both Houses of Congress. If this provision is proper for one year, it is proper for two years. If it is proper that the Secretary of Agriculture shall take up this matter and give it fair consideration, it is improper to cut off his labors at the expiration of one year when he has just started in the investigation of so gigantic a subject as is presented and submitted to him in the law passed by both Houses of Congress.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] stated that there was no limit to the number of chemists. If there is no limit to the number of chemists in this bill, there is no limit in the bill which has already passed, for they are practically the same. But I think it is perfectly safe, and we necessarily must leave something to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture.

I submitted this question, however, to the Secretary of Agriculture since the debate which we had somewhere about a week or so ago, and received this written reply, which I desire to read for the benefit of the Senator from New Hampshire and those who objected to this bill upon the ground that it gave too great power to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me for a moment?

Mr. MCCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has alluded to me several times in his speech, and I think his observations would lead persons reading his speech to the conclusion that I had antagonized this bill. I will say that the only purpose I had in view was to get information concerning it. I am not opposed to the bill, so far as I know, and have not been opposed to it, but I wanted information on certain points connected with the bill, and that was my only purpose in making the inquiry.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I understood that to be the purpose, and I thought the question of the Senator from New Hampshire very pertinent and needed an answer, or I should not have gone to the trouble of getting this information for him. This is a letter of date June 17, which I received from the Department of Agriculture. It reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., June 17, 1902.

Hon. P. J. MCCUMBER,
Senate of the United States.

DEAR SIR: In response to your personal inquiries for further information on some of the provisions of the pure-food bill now pending before the Senate I have the honor to make the following statements:

1. In regard to the provisions in section 1, page 14 of the bill now before the Senate, beginning with the last word of line 11 and reading as follows: "The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to employ such chemists, inspectors, clerks, laborers, and other employees as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act and to make such publication of the results of examinations and analyses as he may deem proper:" In pursuance of this authority the Secretary could only employ such number of persons as the Congress would authorize from time to time in the appropriation bills providing for the conduct of the work.

The Department of Agriculture already has a trained corps of chemists who, under the authority of Congress granted from year to year, have been engaged for the past fifteen years in the study of food adulterations. To this corps of chemists will be committed all the principal investigations connected with the execution of the law. From time to time it would be necessary in the different States to employ local chemists who, under the direction of the Department of Agriculture, could conduct special analyses and appear as witnesses before courts. It will be my purpose, if the proposed bill becomes a law, to collaborate with the officers of the various States charged with the execution of the State laws, and when practicable secure the services of the State chemists for such periods of time as may be necessary to conduct the work above mentioned. Any increase in the chemical force of the Department at Washington will be only such as is rendered necessary by the increased work required for the proper execution of the law. Estimates for this increased work will be submitted to Congress from year to year in connection with the usual estimates for the work of the Department.

What is said above in regard to chemists will apply with equal force to the other classes of employees mentioned in the section quoted.

2. In regard to section 7, on page 20, reading as follows: "That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to fix standards of food products when advisable, and to determine the wholesomeness or unwholesomeness of preservatives and other substances which are or may be added to foods; and to aid him in reaching just decisions in such matters he is authorized to call upon the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry and the chairman of the committee on food standards of the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists and such physicians, not less than five, as the President of the United States shall select, three of whom shall be from the medical departments of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine-Hospital Service, and not less than five experts, to be selected by the Secretary of Agriculture by reason of their attainments in physiological chemistry, hygiene, commerce, and manufactures, to consider jointly the standards of all food products (within the meaning of this act), and to study the effect of the preservatives and other substances added to food products on the health of the consumer; and when so determined and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture such standards shall guide the chemists of the Department of Agriculture in the performance of the duties imposed upon them by this act. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture, either directly or through the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry and the chairman of the committee on food standards of the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists and the medical officers and experts before mentioned, to confer with and consult, when so requested, the duly accredited representatives of all industries producing articles for which standards shall be established under the provisions of this act." I desire to make the following observation:

The purposes of this section, it seems to me, are of the highest importance, both from an economic and hygienic standpoint. The practice of using preservatives and coloring matters is widespread, and these bodies enter into many articles of food. If they are not deleterious to health and improve the keeping qualities and appearance of the food products there can be no valid objection to their use. If, on the contrary, they are injurious to health, this fact would neutralize any value which they might have otherwise, and would lead to the conclusion that they ought not to be present in food products.

So grave a question as this ought not to be decided by the opinion of any one person. It should only be resolved by the consensus of the experience of experts capable of dealing experimentally with the matter and who engage in the work without any bias of any kind. Expert opinions as given before the courts of justice at the present time are quite universally ex parte, and of course in their conclusions the bias, if any, is on the side of the employer. If these questions could be decided by such a commission as the proposed law contemplates, the decision would have an authority which would appeal strongly to all unprejudiced men and especially to courts of justice. While such decisions, it is true, would not be legally binding on any court, they would form a basis for consideration which, while not binding the court, would undoubtedly guide it in the right direction. This would secure greater uniformity in the decisions of the courts and greater simplicity in the enforcement of food laws in all States.

It may be also objected that this section gives the Secretary of Agriculture too great an authority in providing that he ascertain standards of purity for food products. It might be urged that the Secretary of Agriculture would establish a certain product of a certain firm as a standard product. While it is not probable that any Secretary of Agriculture would ever consider such an arbitrary act, even if he did he would have no authority to do such a thing under the law. He could only state that a food product of a certain composition, specifying the percentages of the various constituents that it contains, should be considered as a type of bodies of that kind. The establishment of such types is highly desirable, especially when it is accomplished by such competent and unbiased authorities as are mentioned in section 7. These types of food products would not only protect the rights of the consumer, but would be even more valuable to the manufacturer, who would have before him always a standard which it would not be difficult for him to reach in the composition of his food products.

Furthermore, it may be said that the provisions of section 7, above referred to, only place upon a broader and surer foundation the authority which is already committed to the Secretary of Agriculture by act of Congress in making appropriation of funds for the Department of Agriculture. It is provided in Public No. 139, an act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, page 13, "that the Secretary of Agriculture, in collaboration with the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists and such other experts as may be necessary, shall establish standards of purity for food products and determine what are regarded as adulterations therein for the guidance of the officials of the various States and of the courts of justice. He is also authorized to investigate the character of proposed food preservatives and coloring matters, to determine their relation to digestion and to health, and to establish the principles which should guide their use."

The authority which is conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture under section 7, as quoted above, is thus only a continuation of that authority which he already possesses. The experts which he is authorized to consult, under section 7, are to a large extent already in the service of the United States, and therefore their employment would entail no additional expense further than that necessary in their investigations. While it is true that it would not be practicable to ask eminent hygienists, physiologists, and chemists not in the service of the United States Government to give their services without compensation, it can not be denied that the money spent in securing such services would be wisely used and result in information which would be of incalculable benefit to our people. It appears to me, therefore, that the provisions of section 7 are wise, necessary, and expedient and are worthy of the careful consideration of the members of Congress.

As a general statement I would like to add the following:

Nearly all the States of the Union now have laws regulating the manufacture and sale of adulterated food and drug products. The object of the proposed legislation is to supplement these laws and to aid in their effective execution by controlling interstate commerce in adulterated food and drug products. The proposed law does not interfere in any way with the police laws of the several States. It so happens, however, that dealers in one State continue to offer for sale food products coming from another State. They often innocently violate the State laws, while the really guilty party is without the jurisdiction of the State courts. The action proposed by Congress will strike at the root of this great evil of food adulteration and thus confer an inestimable boon not only upon the consumer, but upon the manufacturer of food products.

Respectfully, JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

Mr. President, among the persons who are selected by the pending bill upon this board are five physicians selected by the President, three of whom are to be selected from the Army, Navy, and Marine-Hospital Corps. As this is not understood thoroughly by all members, I desire to read a letter from the Department of Agriculture concerning this provision and the eminent fitness of these particular persons to be selected for service upon this board. In a letter of April 8, referring to this subject, the Secretary of Agriculture states:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY, OFFICE OF THE CHIEF,
Washington, D. C., April 8, 1902.

Hon. P. J. MCCUMBER, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: In harmony with your request, I inclose a brief sketch showing the organization and constitution of the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists and the nature and character of the last Pharmacopœia. I send also a brief statement respecting the Medical Departments of the Army and Navy and the Marine-Hospital Service.

Sincerely,

H. W. WILEY, Chief.

P. S.—I am sending you a copy of Bulletin 57, which contains the historical sketch of the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists referred to in the inclosed paper.

UNITED STATES PHARMACOPŒIA.

The Pharmacopœia of the United States is a book of standards for drugs established eighty years ago by the learned medical and pharmaceutical societies of the United States, and represents thus the consensus of the highest authority possible to be secured on the composition of drugs and drug standards. A committee, representing all the medical and pharmaceutical societies in the United States and the medical and surgical faculties of the medical colleges of the country, meets decennially for the purpose of revising the standards in the Pharmacopœia and bringing the publication up to date. The results of the meeting in 1900 have not yet been published, so that the Pharmacopœia of the seventh decennial review, of 1890, is still in vogue and will remain the standard until the issue of the new edition, which is expected soon.

The foundation of the organization controlling this publication was laid by Dr. Lyman Spalding, of New York City, who submitted to the Medical Society of the county of New York a project for the formation of a National Pharmacopœia. The edition of 1890 was issued by the committee above mentioned, representing the colleges and learned societies named, which met in the city of Washington on the 7th day of May, 1890, and continued in session for several days. All the States and Territories were represented on this commission, and practically all of the medical and pharmaceutical societies and colleges in the United States. The officers of the commission were as follows:

President, Horatio C. Wood, M. D., LL. D., of Philadelphia.
First vice-president, W. S. Thompson, of Washington.
Second vice-president. J. M. Flint, M. D., United States Navy.
Third vice-president, D. Webster Prentiss, M. D., of Washington.
Fourth vice-president, Albert E. Ebert, Ph. G., of Chicago.
Fifth vice-president, W. M. Searby, Ph. G., of San Francisco.
Secretary, H. A. Hare, M. D., of Philadelphia.
Assistant secretary, G. H. Charles Klie, of St. Louis, Mo.

The convention selected the following gentlemen to supervise, under the direction of the convention, the revision and publication of the Pharmacopœia of the United States, viz: Charles Rice, Ph. D., New York, N. Y., chairman; Joseph P. Remington, Ph. M., Philadelphia, Pa., first vice-chairman; Robert T. Edes, M. D., Jamaica Plain, Mass., second vice-chairman; Charles O. Curtman, Ph. G., M. D., St. Louis, Mo., third vice-chairman; Frederick A. Castle, M. D., New York, N. Y., secretary; James M. Flint, M. D., Washington, D. C., treasurer; Roberts Bartholow, M. D., LL. D., Philadelphia, Pa.; P. Wendover Bedford, Ph. G., New York, N. Y.; N. S. Davis, jr., M. D., Chicago, Ill.; C. Lewis Diehl, Ph. M., Louisville, Ky.; Robert G. Eccles, M. D., Brooklyn, N. Y.; John Godfrey, M. D., Stapleton, N. Y.; Willis G. Gregory, Ph. G., M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.; C. S. N. Hallberg, Ph. G., Chicago, Ill.; John M. Maisch, Ph. M., Phar. D., Philadelphia, Pa.; George F. H. Markoe, Ph. G., A. M., Boston, Mass.; William M. Mew, M. D., Washington, D. C.; Charles Mohr, Mobile, Ala.; Oscar Oldberg, Phar. D., Chicago, Ill.; Frederick B. Power, Ph. D., Passaic, N. J.; Henry H. Rusby, M. D., New York, N. Y.; Lucius E. Sayre, Ph. G., Lawrence, Kans.; Alfred B. Taylor, A. M., Ph. M., Philadelphia, Pa.; Otto A. Wall, Ph. G., M. D., St. Louis, Mo.; Horatio C. Wood, M. D., LL. D., Philadelphia, Pa.; Thomas F. Wood, M. D., Wilmington, N. C.

The last Pharmacopœia thus represents the official utterances of those who are preeminently qualified to determine the standards in drug products throughout the country. Its standards are universally accepted by the courts, by physicians, and by pharmacists throughout the country.

ASSOCIATION OF OFFICIAL AGRICULTURAL CHEMISTS.

The Association of Official Agricultural Chemists grew out of a movement inaugurated by Mr. H. J. Redding, now director of the Georgia agricultural experiment station, who induced Hon. J. T. Henderson, commissioner of agriculture of the State of Georgia, to call a meeting of the agricultural chemists of the United States in May, 1880. This meeting was held in Atlanta, and adjourned to meet later in the season in Boston, in connection with the American Association for the Advancement of Science. This meeting took place in August, 1880.

A tentative plan of cooperation was agreed upon in these meetings, but for some reason the organization lapsed, and no further meetings were called until the spring of 1884, when another meeting of agricultural chemists was held in Atlanta. This meeting adjourned to meet in Philadelphia, where, on September 8, 1884, a formal organization of the agricultural chemists took place, which has remained unbroken to the present time.

This organization was at once taken under the auspices of the United States Department of Agriculture, and since that period has been recognized as an important branch of the agricultural work of that Department. The proceedings of the association are published as bulletins of the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department, and the chief of that Bureau has been the permanent secretary of the association since 1889.

The constitution of the association contains, among others, the following provision:

"Chemists connected with the United States Department of Agriculture, or with any State or national agricultural experiment station or agricultural college, or with any State or national institution or body charged with official control of the materials named in section 1, shall alone be eligible to membership."

The clause of section 1 referred to relates to the investigation of fertilizers, soils, cattle foods, dairy products, and other materials connected with agricultural industry.

A list of the members who have attended the meetings of the society is found on pages 14–16 of Bulletin No. 57 of the Bureau of Chemistry, of the Department of Agriculture. A historical sketch of the association up to 1899 is found in the same bulletin, page 16 and following.

The association represents practically every chemist occupying any official position in the United States connected in any way with agriculture or agricultural products. The study of foods, both for man and beast, has been one of the chief functions of this association, and in order to secure definite and reliable ideas in regard to the composition of foods the association, several years ago, appointed a committee on food standards, a highly representative body, including members from every part of the United States, who are experts on food investigations. The chairman of this committee, thus officially constituted and recognized as an official or employee of the Government, and holding, as he does, a commission from the Secretary of Agriculture as special agent to study foods, is designated in the bill as one of the members of the commission to study the composition of foods, food standards, and the effect of preservatives, coloring matters, and other substances added to foods upon the health. The qualifications and credentials of such a member as this are of the highest character. The present chairman of the committee on food standards is Dr. William Frear, chemist and assistant director of the agricultural experiment station of Pennsylvania.

ARMY AND NAVY.

The medical service of the Army of the United States is under the direction of the Surgeon-General, the present incumbent being Gen. George M. Sternberg. It comprises all who are engaged in any way in the medical service of the Army. There are many of the physicians attached to the military service who have made special studies of food products and have direct charge of supervising the rations of the Army and the foods of the invalids in the Army hospitals of the country. These thus comprise the highest talent in the medical profession of the Army in respect of food products.

The medical service of the Navy is comprised in the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, and is under the direction of Surg. Gen. W. K. Van Reypen.

The Marine-Hospital Service is under the control of the Treasury Department and is under the direction of Supervising Surg. Gen. Walter Wyman, an acknowledged authority throughout the country on foods and hygiene.

It is evident that in selecting from these three branches of the medical service of the United States experts of the very highest character will be secured.

In addition to the above medical experts, it is provided that two physicians from private life be designated by the President, thus enabling him to add to the above high medical and hygienic talent in the service of the United States two physicians of the country most eminent in their researches in physiology, physiological chemistry, hygiene, and nutrition, thus completing a board of physicians of the highest possible talent.

COMMERCE AND MANUFACTURE.

In addition to the experts selected by the President, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to select five men "by reason of their attainments in physiological chemistry, hygiene, commerce, and manufactures."

Thus there will be represented on this board the great business interests controlling the production and movement of food products. The board is certain, therefore, to have at least one man eminent in commerce and one eminent in manufacture, and these men, by their practical knowledge of affairs, will add great strength to the deliberations of the committee. It is not expected, of course, that these will be men who are skilled in chemistry, physiology, or hygiene, but there are other considerations to be kept in view, viz, manufacture and distribution of food products, which must receive attention. The Secretary of Agriculture thus selects five men, two of whom, at least, shall represent the business interests of the country and the others be eminent in their attainments on the questions which will be under consideration.

It appears that it would be difficult to devise a plan whereby a better or more suitable body of men could be secured for the purpose of studying in a wholly impartial manner the great questions which underlie food standards and the effects upon the health of preservatives, coloring matters, and other substances commonly added to food products.

Every State of the Union having a pure-food law is asking the assistance of the United States Government in supplemental legislation. Everybody in the several States having control over the subject of pure-food law is asking for the same. Not only this, but so far as I know every honest manufacturer in the United States is asking for the same class of legislation and is sending in his approval of this bill.

Mr. President, to show the trend of thought and the feeling of the manufacturers and the dealers in food products, I wish to submit in substance extracts from letters from not only the manufacturers themselves, but also from dealers in food products. I will give a few of them, but will ask that the others be printed.

Chapman & Smith Company, importers and manufacturers, of Chicago, under date of May 29, 1902, write as follows:

The importance of the pure-food question is obvious. It is up. It will not down.

Public health should be, must be safeguarded. Nearly every State in the Union has enacted some sort of pure-food legislation to meet the public demand for the same. These laws are very divergent and some fall far short of really protecting the consumer against harmful food products.

Public opinion, we believe, strongly favors more adequate and more effective pure-food legislation.

There is a growing demand throughout the country for a national pure-food law that will save the annoyance of conflicting State laws. We feel confident that State laws would soon be brought to conform to the national pure-food law.

We heartily favor the Hansbrough bill as amended by the Committee on Manufactures.

We earnestly desire that every effort be made to bring this Hansbrough bill, as amended, to a vote in the Senate during the present session of Congress.

We appreciate most heartily the earnest efforts you have made in the behalf of pure food, and we avail ourselves of this opportunity to express to you our sincere thanks.

The J. P. Dieter Company, importers and manufacturers, of Chicago, under date of May 31, write:

As we all know, there has been a general agitation in and out of Congress for a national pure-food law. We ourselves also know and realize, through the channel of our twenty-five or more traveling salesmen, that there is a general demand throughout the country for some such law given us by Congress as will save us the annoyance of all the various divergent State requirements.

We write this briefly, not wishing to encroach too much upon your time; but we feel there should be a national pure-food law passed at this session of Congress, and we here desire to thank you for your earnest efforts for pure food, and hope that you will make every effort to bring your measure to a vote in the Senate.

Jaques Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, under date of May 31, write:

For several years past countless pure-food bills have been introduced in Congress, and a great deal of time and energy has been spent to secure the passage of a bill that would be satisfactory to all interests.

We are free to acknowledge that the Hansbrough bill, as amended by the Committee on Manufactures, is not exactly what we should like, but it is so near perfect food legislation that we feel that we should set aside our personal interests, and therefore write you in the hopes that you will do what you are able to in using your influence in the passage of this Hansbrough bill, which will give the country what it has so long been seeking—a food bill protecting the public, and which is at the same time fair to the manufacturers in all lines, and we do not believe will be a hardship on any industry or manufacturer who manufactures healthful goods and is willing to sell them on their merits and for what they are.

Another short letter from the Bullen Baking Powder Company, of Chicago, who, under date of June 5, write:

We beg to thank you, in the interest of the manufacturer, for your earnest efforts in the interests of the pure-food laws, and assure you that they have been deeply appreciated by all either directly or indirectly affected by them.

We beg to urge upon you the necessity of using every effort in your power to bring the measure to a vote in the Senate, and trust that you will meet with overwhelming success. The manufacturers throughout the country are beginning to appreciate the fact that pure-food legislation is now at a point where national law is absolutely necessary. Were a national law passed it would be the means of saving the manufacturer a great deal of trouble in trying to conform to the various State laws now in existence, and we feel confident that a national law, such as your bill promotes, would very soon have the hearty support of the State legislatures.

Dodson Braun Manufacturing Company, of St. Louis, Mo., under date of June 4, write as follows:

Believing that the time is now ripe for the passage of a national pure-food law, we write to request that you make every effort to procure the enactment of the same during the present session.

In this connection we desire to thank you most heartily for the earnest efforts which you have already put forth in behalf of such a food law.

I read another short letter from St. Louis. Eddy & Eddy, grocers and manufacturers, of St. Louis, Mo., under date of June 5, write:

We take the liberty to write you in regard to our urgent desires to have the passage of the Hansbrough bill as amended by the Committee on Manufactures. We believe that pure-food legislation has reached the point where a national law is demanded, and we also believe that if we had a national pure-food law the State laws would very soon conform to it, and, as matters now stand, we are very much annoyed in having to conform to so many different laws. It causes us endless detail, which is almost impossible to keep pace with. We earnestly desire that this bill be passed during the present session of Congress.

These are from manufacturers, Mr. President, and also from dealers. I have several here of the same character.

J. C. Grant Chemical Company, manufacturers of baking powder, of East St. Louis, Ill., under date of June 5, write:

As manufacturers of a food product which we know to be absolutely healthful and which has been so pronounced by the most eminent chemists of the country, but which has nevertheless been subjected to attack from interested parties manufacturing rival products, such attacks going the length of corrupting legislatures, as in the State of Missouri, and having become a public scandal, we feel that a national pure-food law is urgently demanded, and would respectfully ask that you do all in your power to see that pure-food legislation is considered during the present session of Congress. We heartily favor the Hansbrough bill as amended by the Committee on Manufactures, and while thanking you most cordially for your earnest efforts in behalf of pure foods, we trust you will not spare any effort to bring the matter to a vote in the Senate, as we feel sure should a national pure-food law be passed the different States would soon fall in line.

Perfect Baking Powder Company, of St. Louis, Mo., under date of May 31, write:

We are continually annoyed by the various pure-food laws, so called, that are passed by the various States, endeavoring to comply with them, and we believe that the country generally would welcome a national law and that the States would gradually conform to it. Your efforts to date are appreciated thoroughly, and we hope that you will not let up until the matter is carried through.

Canby, Ach & Canby, coffee roasters and baking powder manufacturers, of Dayton, Ohio, under date of June 3, write:

We have read with much pleasure your remarks in favor of the passage of a pure-food measure. We believe that the bill supported by you contains all the necessary features to protect both the consumer and the upright manufacturer, and at the same time is so drawn as to prevent its being utilized to further any attempt to subserve a special interest. We sincerely hope you will use your further influence in favor of the bill. From our knowledge of the sentiment throughout the country we are sure that a pure-food measure such as you have advocated is earnestly wanted by the country. We believe that everyone who is influential in the matter of passing such a bill will earn the gratitude of the great mass of the consumers.

Washburn-Halligan Coffee Company, of Davenport, Iowa, under date of June 2, write:

We desire to call your attention to the fact that as manufacturers and jobbers of goods we are vitally interested in the efforts that are being made in the United States Senate and House of Representatives, as well as in our own State legislature to enact such pure-food legislation, as will protect the consumer in the purchase and selection of goods and not interfere with the honest manufacturer who is endeavoring to cater to such a trade.

After careful consideration and some experience along this line, we are confident that pure-food legislation has now reached the point where a national law is demanded.

We therefore heartily favor the Hansbrough bill as amended by the Committee on Manufactures. We know there is a general demand throughout the whole country for national pure-food legislation which will save the annoyance of various State requirements. We are confident that should the national pure-food law be passed the State laws would soon conform to it.

Mr. President, there are a number of others, one of recent date, which is directed to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], from Reading, Pa., which reads as follows:

THE RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION,
NO. 300 SOUTH SIXTH STREET,
Reading, Pa., June 20, 1902.

Hon. M. S. QUAY.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association of Berks County held recently resolutions were unanimously adopted indorsing the pure-food bill now before Congress known in the House as the Hepburn bill and reported to the Senate by the Committee on Manufactures, of which Hon. P. J. MCCUMBER is chairman. I am instructed by the association to write you informing you of the action and request you to support the bill and use your influence in having the same passed. By complying with the above you will greatly oblige the aforesaid association.

Yours, very truly,

E. J. MORRIS, Secretary.

Mr. President, this is the character of letters we are receiving from all over the United States. There is perhaps not a single State in the Union which has not responded to the feeling of the particular State through its grocers, its retail merchants, in supporting a law of this kind.

I submit and ask that the balance of these letters or extracts from them which I have prepared be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WELLINGTON in the chair).

The Senator from North Dakota requests that a number of letters which he has not read be incorporated in his remarks and printed therein. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The letters are as follows:

Mr. McCUMBER. Tone Brothers, importers and manufacturers of coffees, flavoring extracts, etc., of Des Moines, Iowa, under date of June 5, write:

We beg to call your attention to the fact that pure-food legislation throughout the different States has reached such a point that a national law is a great necessity, for the reason that any State that has a law on this subject differs very materially from its neighboring State, so that, taking this into consideration, you can readily see the importance of a law in uniformity. We are thoroughly convinced that the Hansbrough bill, as amended by the Committee on Manufactures, now before the Senate for consideration, is a most desirable measure and meets with our unqualified approval.

Crescent Manufacturing Company, of Seattle, Wash., under date of June 4, write:

As manufacturers of food products and as citizens of a State enjoying some of the benefits of an excellent pure-food law, we beg to express our appreciation of the obligation that the friends of pure-food legislation are under for the efforts you have put forth in their behalf. We have watched with much interest the struggle for the passage of a national pure-food law, and have hoped that the earnest support of yourself and of other friends of the cause would result in the adoption by the present Congress of the Hansbrough bill. It is the judgment of those interested in the enforcement of our State law that only with the assistance of a national law to supplement the State laws can the latter be rendered fully effective, and we are convinced that never before was there so general a demand among the people for national legislation of this character.

Closset & Devers, manufacturers, importers, and jobbers, of Portland, Oreg., under date of June 2, write:

As manufacturers of food products, we beg to call your attention to the Hansbrough bill, as amended by the Committee on Manufactures, and to state that we heartily indorse and are most emphatically in favor of the passage of the bill.

We think that pure-food legislation has now reached the point where a national law is required.

We feel confident that should a national pure-food law be passed, the various State laws would soon conform to it, and thus save the annoyance to which all the manufacturers of food products are now subjected by the various State requirements.

F. Menown Manufacturing Company, of Kansas City, Mo., under date of June 2, write:

There is a general demand throughout the country for a national pure-food law which will save the annoyance of the various divergent State requirements, and to that end we earnestly desire that every effort shall be brought to bear to bring the Hansbrough bill to a vote during the present session of Congress.

The H. D. Lee Mercantile Company, jobbers, manufacturers, and importers, of Salina, Kans., under date of June 3, write:

For your kind consideration and information we wish to state that we are greatly interested in pure-food legislation. We believe that the efforts made in the past in that direction have resulted in creating a strong public sentiment in favor of a national law covering that question. We have come to the conclusion that great annoyance can be avoided by a national law. In some instances State laws are in harmony with each other and in others in direct conflict.

We want to put ourselves on record as in favor of pure-food legislation and also in favor of legislation that is uniform. While the State undoubtedly have a right to legislate upon this question as they see fit, nevertheless, should such a good law as the Hansbrough bill be passed by the National Congress, we are very sure, as stated above, that the States would soon fall into line. This would certainly be a grand, good thing for the people as well as for the manufacturer.

Taylor Baking Powder Company, of St. Louis, Mo., under date of May 30, write:

We wish to extend to you our sincere thanks for your earnest efforts in behalf of pure food, and would urge upon you the necessity of bringing your measure to a vote during the present session of Congress.

Laten Pure Food Company, of East St. Louis, Ill., under date of May 31, write:

We most earnestly urge upon you the necessity of securing, if possible, the recognition of your pure-food measure during the present session of Congress. National pure-food legislation has become an absolute necessity. Not only should the public be protected from the frauds practiced by the unscrupulous manufacturers, but the legitimate manufacturers are sorely in need of protection from the many different (some foolish) laws in force in the different States, and no two States have the same laws. Should the Hansbrough bill pass, the State laws would undoubtedly conform to it very soon, a thing which would be welcomed by every manufacturer of food products in the United States.

Stagmaier & Fletcher, wholesale grocers, of Chattanooga, Tenn., under date of May 31, write:

There has been much agitation for some years for pure-food legislation by the people, the State legislatures, and the Congress. The State laws are now quite at variance with each other—probably some good and others bad. It is our belief that a national law would conserve the interests of the people at this time.

McCormick, Behnke & Co., wholesale grocers, of St. Paul, Minn., under date of May 31, write:

We beg to call your attention to the Hansbrough bill as amended by the Committee on Manufactures, in which we are very much interested. You are no doubt aware that pure-food legislation has now reached a point where a national law is required. A national pure-food law will save the annoyance of all of the various divergent State requirements, and we feel should a national pure-food law be passed, the State laws would soon conform to it; and we earnestly desire that every effort shall be brought to bring the Hansbrough bill to a vote during the present session of Congress. We are heartily in favor of this bill and trust when we ask you to support it we do not ask too much.

Foley Brothers & Kelly, importers, manufacturers, and wholesale grocers, of St. Paul, Minn., under date of June 4, write:

The various requirements governing the sale of food products in each State make it imperative, from our position as wholesale grocers, doing business in several States, that a national pure-food law should be passed at the earliest possible moment, to prevent the many annoyances to which dealers in food products are now subjected.

Griggs, Cooper & Co., manufacturers, importers, and wholesale grocers, of St. Paul, Minn., under date of June 5, write:

We have watched the pure-food legislation with some interest, and are pleased to note the earnest efforts you have made in reference to this subject. We heartily approve of the Hansbrough bill as amended by the Committee on Manufactures, and hope that through your efforts the bill may become a law at this session of Congress.

The dissimilarity of food laws in different States makes it exceedingly difficult for manufacturers all over the country, and this law, we believe, would so far satisfy the public requirements that the various States would adopt its general provisions in their pure-food legislation.

We sincerely hope that this bill will become a law and that the country will be relieved from present conditions, which are very embarrassing to manufacturers all over the country.

William McMurray & Co., tea and coffee importers and manufacturers, of St. Paul, Minn., under date of June 5, write:

Manufacturers throughout the country have gratefully watched your able efforts in behalf of national pure-food legislation, and we would respectfully thank you for your efforts in that direction. We would urge the necessity of the utmost being done to bring your measure to a vote in the Senate.

Climax Coffee and Baking Powder Company, of Indianapolis, Ind., under date of June 2, write:

We desire to thank you for your efforts in behalf of pure-food legislation, which we think is one of the important things now before Congress, in behalf of our manufacturers and likewise the consumers of food products. We further wish to urge upon you the importance of this measure being brought to a vote in the Senate.

Wabash Baking Powder Company, of Wabash, Ind., under date of May 31, write:

We know that there is a general demand throughout the country for a national pure-food law which will save the annoyance of all of the varied divergent State requirements, and should a national law be passed, the State laws would soon conform to it.

Kenton Baking Powder Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, under date of June 3, writes:

As manufacturers of a food product we wish to thank you for your very earnest efforts in behalf of a national pure-food law.

We are heartily in favor of what is known as the Hansbrough bill as amended by your committee, and we earnestly urge you to secure the consideration of the same this session of Congress.

Hulman & Co., importers, manufacturers, and jobbers, of Terre Haute, Ind., under date of May 31, write:

We wish to thank you for your earnest efforts in behalf of pure food, and we sincerely hope that this matter may come to a vote in your present session.

The Hansbrough pure-food bill is very satisfactory to us, and we believe it would save the annoyance of all of the various divergent State requirements. Should a national pure-food law be passed, we believe the State laws would soon conform to it.

Joseph Strong & Co., wholesale grocers, of Terre Haute, Ind., under date of May 31, write:

We know there is a general demand throughout the country for a national pure-food law, which will save the annoyance of all various divergent State requirements, and we feel, should a national pure-food law be passed, the State laws would soon conform to it, and we earnestly hope that you will use every effort to bring the Hansbrough bill as amended to a vote during the present session.

Central City Soap Company, of Jackson, Mich., under date of June 5, write:

We feel that a national pure-food law in proper terms would be a blessing to the country, as the States would probably largely conform to it, and this would put a stop to the ever reoccurring agitation in the various States for a change of food laws, and the attempts by unscrupulous people to take advantage of the public and various manufacturers in this way. We sincerely hope that the bill as amended by your committee may be passed by the present session, and trust you will continue your efforts to bring it to a vote.

McFadden Coffee and Spice Company, of Dubuque, Iowa, under date of May 29, write:

We are interested in bringing this measure to a vote at this session of Congress as, we feel the urgent need of a national pure-food law, one to which we think the States would very soon conform, and afford us an opportunity to adjust our business so as to conform to the laws of all States without being forced to carry a separate line of goods for each State in which we do business. Any action taken by Congress to afford relief to jobbers and manufacturers will meet with hearty approval from every dealer in these lines of goods throughout our State and throughout the country.

C. Read & Co., of Baltimore, Md., under date of May 28, write:

We write to thank you for the interest you have taken in the pure-food measure, and we would like to see some definite action taken on this matter so that we will know what we have to conform to. We consider that the Hansbrough bill is fair and equitable, and we sincerely hope that same will pass this session.

The Sea Gull Specialty Company, of Baltimore, Md., under date of May 28, write:

We have noted with much pleasure your interest in pure food, and we respectfully urge that you try and get consideration of the bill at this session of Congress. It is a splendid bill, in the interest of the people and of commerce. The agitation of the bill for pure food has now reached a point where a national law is demanded, and the time has arrived when the people should have protection against harmful foods.

Dudley & Co., of Fairport, N. Y., under date of May 30, write:

There is a general demand throughout the country for a national pure-food law which will save the annoyance of all the various divergent State requirements, and should a national law be passed, the State laws would conform to it.

We earnestly desire that every effort shall be used to bring your measure as amended by your committee to a vote in the Senate, and to thank you for your efforts in behalf of the pure-food law.

Anderson Food Company, of Camden, N. Y., under date of April 25, write:

We, as you know, among other manufacturers in this line indorsed and had presented the Corliss pure-food bill to the Committee on Interstate Commerce in the House.

Since that time we have very carefully followed the evidence taken before the House and Senate committees, and we among other manufacturers are of the opinion that from the attitude of the members of these committees the National Government would administer such a bill as the Hepburn bill on very much broader and liberal lines than has been our experience in the various States.

We think it might interest you, therefore, to know that we withdraw all opposition to the Hepburn bill, which, of course, is the natural result of our change of opinion.

E. SCHNEIDER & CO., MANUFACTURERS OF BAKING POWDER,
Cleveland, Ohio, June 23, 1902.

Senator PORTER J. MCCUMBER,
Chairman of Committee on Hansbrough Bill, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are in hearty accord with your sentiments as expressed in your recent speech on pure-food matters before the Senate. It is certainly the most forceful presentation of this cause that it has been our pleasure to see. We are heartily in favor of the bill which you are advocating, and we sincerely hope that you will succeed in getting it before the Senate, as we feel sure that Congress must be aware that there is a strong public sentiment back of this demand for pure food. We have a selfish reason in urging the passage of pure-food legislation of a national character, as we are much annoyed in the different States by the different requirements and by technical rulings, which we think will be eliminated as soon as a national law is passed. Permit us to thank you for your advocacy of this worthy cause and pledge every assistance in our power.

Respectfully, yours, E. SCHNEIDER & CO.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Now, Mr. President, I have given you the expressions of those who are in favor of this proposition, and I have yet to hear from any concern which will have the boldness to come here and say that they have any honest objection to this bill. If there are any objections, I should like to have them given before the Senate by any Senator who takes the stand that this bill is not right in any particular. The Committee on Manufactures desired to present a bill which would receive the hearty approval of the Senate as well as the approval of the public. We believe we have presented a bill, and I have given you to-day some of the evidences of the feeling of the public in reference to it, and I see no reason why it should not be considered at this session and should not be passed.

Mr. President, in closing I simply desire to call attention to one objection that is made on behalf of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. In a letter the health department writes to me as follows:

The proviso—

Referring to section 11—

is as follows:

"Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with legislation now in force, enacted either by Congress for the District of Columbia or by the Territorial legislatures for the several Territories, regulating commerce in adulterated foods within the District of Columbia and the several Territories."

To amend this proviso in the manner indicated in your letter would be equivalent, in my judgment, to striking it out; for the proposed modification would effect the repeal of all existing legislation in conflict with the Hansbrough bill, and that is all that can occur if this proviso be omitted.

Mr. President, I will first read the whole section. It is as follows:

SEC. 11. That this act shall not be construed to interfere with commerce wholly internal in any State, nor with the exercise of their police powers by the several States: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with legislation now in force, enacted either by Congress for the District of Columbia or by the Territorial legislatures for the several Territories, regulating commerce in adulterated foods and drugs within the District of Columbia and the several Territories, except wherein such legislation conflicts with the provisions herein.

Now, I fail to see where this conflicts in any way with purely local legislation in the District of Columbia or in the Territories. The only legislation that is provided in this bill is simply a prohibition against the importation into the District of Columbia and the States of adulterated articles of food unless they are properly branded, and the sale in the States in original unbroken packages, and the sale in any manner in the District of Columbia of articles of adulterated or misbranded food.

There is no law upon the statute books authorizing the sale in the District of Columbia of adulterated foods, there is no law authorizing the sale of misbranded foods, and all that this proposed law does is to prohibit the sale therein. I know of no law which regulates the sale in the District which would be in conflict with this law.

Mr. President, that is all I desire to say to-day, as 2 o'clock has now arrived. I shall ask at some other time that the bill be taken up for final consideration before the adjournment of Congress.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13123) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 13, 17, 18, 19, 20, 23, 24, 27, 30, 32, 38, 41, 44, 141, 143, 160, 185, 186, and 191.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 16, 21, 25, 28, 29, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 42, 43, and 120, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 142: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 142, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert $2,000,000; and after the word "dollars," at the end of line 14, page 97 of the bill, insert the following: "Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to acquire leases in such lands in Hawaii as have been set aside for purposes of a military post;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the Army appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 25, 1902.

Resolved, That the House recedes from its adherence to the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. R. 12804, "An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903," numbered 14, and agrees to the same with the following amendment: Strike out "four" and insert "three," and after "million," page 22, line 13 of the bill, insert "three hundred and fifty thousand."

That the House insists on its amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15.

Mr. PROCTOR. The amendment proposed by the House to amendment No. 14 is an amendment which was asked for by the Senate conferees. I suppose it is proper to say that. The House recedes from its adherence to its disagreement to that amendment and proposes the amendment suggested by the Senate. Amendment No. 15 is one that was previously considered. I move that the Senate agree to the House amendment to amendment No. 14, and that it recede from its disagreement to the House amendment to amendment No. 15, and agree to the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate agree to the amendment proposed by the House to amendment No. 14 and recede from its disagreement to the House amendment to amendment No. 15, and agree to the same.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right. That settles it. It winds up the bill and permits it to become a law.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to have an explanation as to the effect of this action upon the matter in controversy between the two Houses. We have heard a good deal about it, and I should like to know what this action does. Does the Senate recede or does the House?

Mr. PROCTOR. Amendment No. 14 added $1,000,000 to the three million as the bill came to us from the House.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understood that the House on some amendment, which went from the Senate, took it out of the hands of the conferees.

Mr. PROCTOR. They did. They adhered to their disagreement. They now recede from their adherence to their disagreement to amendment No. 14, which is the one on which there was special difference, and agree to it with an amendment proposed by the Senate conferees. So the Senate retains its right to increase an appropriation.

Mr. COCKRELL. It seems that amendment No. 14, which the Senate, and the Presiding Officer, and so many said was held in abeyance, somehow or other got into the hands of the conferees, and they settled it as they would have done right at the beginning.

The House practically receded from its disagreement to amendment No. 14. That provided for $4,000,000. This they amended by striking out "four" and inserting "three" and adding "three hundred and fifty thousand."

Mr. BATE. The three hundred and fifty thousand goes to the fifteenth amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. It goes to amendment No. 14. Then we agree to the amendment they made to amendment No. 15 by receding from our disagreement. So that ends the whole thing.

Mr. BATE. If I understood the Senator, amendment No. 14 reads not "$3,000,000," but "$3,350,000."

Mr. ALDRICH. It is important that the proper parliamentary motion should be made in this matter, as this purports to be an agreement between the two Houses.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no.

Mr. ALDRICH. The adoption of the motion means an agreement between the two Houses on the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. This comes up as the result of the conference report, and the entries that are made are correct.

Mr. ALDRICH. Amendment No. 15, which has been under discussion, is an amendment——

Mr. COCKRELL. Made by the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Made by the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. And amended by the House.

Mr. ALDRICH. And an agreement means a recession on the part of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was amended by the House, and we disagreed to the amendment, and it went into conference. We reported a disagreement. But now we move that the Senate recede from its disagreement and agree to that amendment. That ends it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Agree to the amendment of the House?

Mr. COCKRELL. Agree to the amendment of the House to amendment No. 15.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That results in an agreement between the two Houses.

Mr. COCKRELL. And enables the bill to become a law.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is the way I understood it. I thought the Senator from Rhode Island was right. It is an agreement between the two Houses.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is an agreement, under that, between the two Houses on the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again put the question, which is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont, which has been stated.

The motion was agreed to.

COURTS IN GEORGIA.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me just a moment that I may ask the Senate for the present consideration of a bill upon which there will be no debate?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; if there is to be no debate, I will yield.

Mr. BACON. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. 12205) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Valdosta, Ga.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. ALDRICH. I believe there is no unfinished business before the Senate. I ask that after the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] shall have concluded his remarks the Senate proceed to unobjected bills upon the Calendar under the eighth rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that after the Senator from New Hampshire has yielded the floor the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar under Rule VIII. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Clay,	Jones, Ark.	Quarles,
Bacon,	Cockrell,	Kean,	Quay,
Bailey,	Culberson,	McEnery,	Scott,
Bate,	Dietrich,	McLaurin, Miss.	Spooner,
Berry,	Dolliver,	McMillan,	Stewart,
Blackburn,	Dryden,	Martin,	Taliaferro,
Burnham,	Fairbanks,	Millard,	Teller,
Burrows,	Foraker,	Money,	Tillman,
Burton,	Frye,	Nelson,	Vest,
Carmack,	Gallinger,	Patterson,	Wellington.
Clark, Mont.	Gamble,	Pettus,
Clark, Wyo.	Heitfeld,	Platt, N. Y.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators have responded to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

SAFETY APPLIANCES ON RAILROADS.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me a moment to enter a privileged motion?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 3560 was passed yesterday.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is the bill in regard to safety appliances on railroads. I do not ask that the motion shall be acted on now, but I will call it up later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the bill been sent to the House?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not sure whether it has been or not.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand the Senator asks that the bill may be reconsidered only for the purpose of changing a date as to the time when a certain part of the act shall go into effect. If the Senator will let the matter lie over until to-morrow, it may not be necessary to press the motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator enter the motion?

Mr. ALDRICH. I enter the motion, and the motion may go over until to-morrow for action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the bill in the meantime has been sent to the House, there should be a motion made for its recall.

Mr. ALDRICH. I meant to include in my motion a motion that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the House be requested to return the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF MINERS.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK] tells me that he is about to leave the city and has a conference report to submit. I yield to the Senator for that purpose and will then take the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Montana submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8327) to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to same with amendments as follows: On page 1, line 8, of the bill strike out "at a depth of 100 feet or more," and the Senate agree to the same; and on page 2, line 19, after the word "currents," insert: "Provided, That all owners, lessees, operators of, or any other person having the control or management of any coal shaft, drift, slope, or pit in the Indian Territory, employing twenty or more miners to work in the same, shall employ shot firers to fire the shots therein. Said shots shall not be fired to exceed one per day, at 12 o'clock noon in cases where the miners work but half a day, and at 5 o'clock in the evening when the mine is working three-quarters or full time, and they shall not be fired until after all miners and other employees working in said shafts, drifts, slopes, or pits shall be out of same;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. A. CLARK,
C. D. CLARK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
MALCOLM A. MOODY,
CHARLES F. SCOTT,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

EXISTING TARIFF LAW.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to speak to the resolution that I offered yesterday, which was laid before the Senate during the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. GALLINGER, as follows:

Resolved, That the present phenomenal prosperity in all lines of business and industry in the United States is largely due to the existing tariff law, and the best interests of the country demand its continuance.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in less than a month the Dingley tariff law will have been in operation five years. It has been for the United States a half decade of the most substantial and marvelous accomplishment in all branches of human endeavor ever known in the history of not only our own country, but of the whole world.

Two years ago I laid before the Senate a résumé of the calamity and misery caused by the Wilson-Gorman tariff law and the wonderful recovery we enjoyed under the first years of the Dingley law, which took its place. I now propose to call attention to a more complete result of this tariff in the principal avenues of finance and commerce.

In every way the Dingley tariff law has been an unqualified success and has more than vindicated the wisdom of its framers. President McKinley within a few hours after his first inauguration called an extra session of Congress, and in his message referring to the need of a new tariff law he said:

Congress should promply correct the existing condition. Ample revenues must be supplied not only for the ordinary expenses of the Government, but for the prompt payment of liberal pensions and the liquidation of the principal and interest of the public debt. In raising revenue, duties should be so levied upon foreign products as to preserve the home market as far as possible to our own producers; to revive and increase manufactures; to relieve and encourage agriculture; to increase our domestic and foreign commerce; to aid and develop mining and building, and to render to labor in every field of useful occupation the liberal wages and adequate rewards to which skill and industry are justly entitled.

On the same day in which this message was read Mr. Dingley, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, introduced the new tariff bill. It passed the House March 31. It passed the Senate in an amended form on July 7, and on July 24 the bill, as agreed to by the conference committee, was signed by the President. It is probable that no act of William McKinley's life gave him more satisfaction than the signing of this measure.

During these five years we have waged and won a war with a foreign nation, we have had strikes involving hundreds of thousands of men, and we have had partial failures in several staple crops, and yet we have had the most prosperous era in our history, and to-day our commercial standing as a nation excites the wonder of the civilized world.

REVENUE.

Let me first call attention to our revenue during the past five years as compared to our revenues under the Wilson-Gorman law. It will be remembered that we had an annual deficit during those low-tariff years, and President Cleveland during a time of peace sold bonds to the amount of $262,000,000, which, with interest to time of maturity, will cost the country half a billion dollars.

The following table will show the revenue under the Dingley law as compared with that of the Wilson-Gorman law:

Year ending June 30—	Customs receipts.	Total receipts.
1895	$152,158,617	$313,390,075
1896	160,021,752	326,976,200
1897	176,554,127	347,721,905
Average	162,911,499	329,362,727
1898	149,576,062	405,321,335
1899	206,128,481	515,960,620
1900	233,164,871	567,240,851
1901	238,491,789	585,752,067
1902	252,000,000	550,000,000
Average	215,872,241	524,854,975

We have repealed war taxes to the amount of over $100,000,000, and yet our revenue is more than sufficient to meet the greatly increased expenses of the Government. For the fiscal year 1900 our surplus was $79,527,060; for 1901 it was $75,713,363, and for 1902 it will exceed $80,000,000, which is quite a difference as compared with the annual deficits under the Wilson-Gorman tariff.

EMPLOYMENT AND EARNINGS.

Supply will always be governed by demand, and demand will depend on ability to buy, so that purchasing power is the basis of prosperity. Our spendable income is governed by the amount of employment and earnings of all classes, and in this respect we are breaking records year after year under the continued successful operation of the Dingley tariff.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, estimated that 3,000,000 men were out of employment during the low-tariff period from 1893 to 1897. Not only that, but the wages of those employed were constantly forced down, many working only part time at that. Now, Mr. President, what does it mean to have 3,000,000 men idle? At $2 per day it means a loss of $1,800,000,000 a year in wages, or $9,000,000,000 in five years. That is more than all the gold and silver in the world. It means a loss of $3,000 each to 3,000,000 families, and $3,000 will buy a large quantity of food and clothing and education and comfort and happiness. The earnings lost during the low-tariff period can not be calculated, but whatever they were we have a different story to tell of the past five years.

Not only is labor all over the country fully employed, but wages have been increased again and again. It is impossible to give exact figures of the number of persons employed or the amount of wages paid, and yet we can get a relative idea from the labor bulletins of the different States. Take Massachusetts, for instance, a typical manufacturing State. The Bureau of Statistics of Labor presents from time to time an index figure indicating the level of employment and earnings. In the May number of the Labor Bulletin a comparison is made between April, 1902, and February, 1898. Starting with 100 as a base, the following result is shown:

	February, 1898.	April, 1902.
Population	100	109.65
Employment	100	116.76
Weekly earnings	100	137.36

That is, employment has increased nearly twice as fast as population, and earnings have increased twice as rapidly as employment, or four times as much as population, and if the comparison were made with 1895 and 1896, the contrast would be much greater. What is true of Massachusetts is no doubt true of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and the other industrial States. This is the result of Dingleyism; this is the foundation of our splendid home market; this is the demand that keeps our mills running night and day, our railroads freighted to their utmost capacity, and our farmers busy and well rewarded with sales of their entire surplus product at good prices. Not only is every income earner employed at high salaries and wages, but the hours of labor have been shortened, with its consequent hour or two more of domestic and social intercourse and happiness.

AGRICULTURE.

I wish to show now, Mr. President, the effect of these immense earnings upon our agriculture, then upon our manufactures. First, as regards agriculture. Said the Orange Judd Farmer, in its issue of October 19, 1901:

The most prosperous year in the history of the American farmer is drawing to a close.

And yet last year we had an unusually short corn crop, a small potato and apple crop, and, with the exception of wheat, only a normal crop in all staples. I now want to compare the size and value of our farm products during 1896, our last low-tariff year, and 1901, our last protection year. The figures are as follows in round millions, as estimated by the Department of Agriculture:

	Quantity.		Value.
	1896.	1901.	1896.	1901.
CROP.
Wheat ..... bushels..	470,000,000	748,000,000	$341,000,000	$467,000,000

Total value live stock	.....	.....	1,626,000,000	2,681,000,000
Aggregate values	.....	.....	3,451,500,000	5,513,500,000

Here is an increase in value of over $1,000,000,000 in these crops and an increase of over $1,000,000,000 in the value of farm animals, and it must be remembered that 1901 was a poor year and 1896 a good year in farm production. What made this increase of over $2,000,000,000? It was the demand of fully employed, well-paid people, due to a tariff that enables us to do our own work instead of hiring the cheap labor abroad to do it for us.

In this connection I want to quote the following from the Orange Judd Farmer of October 19, 1901:

Encouraging as is the agricultural situation for this year, it is still more interesting when we reflect that 1901 is the fifth year of the successive upward trend to agricultural values. Some conception may be formed of the tremendous improvement that has been wrought in the farmers' financial condition when we find that for the past five years the cereal crops made a value of $6,245,000,000, compared to $5,282,000,000 during the five years of agricultural depression ending with 1896. The annual average value of cows, cattle, hogs, and sheep for the past half decade has been $345,000,000 more than for the previous period, but the total value of horses still shows a heavy decline from the boom of 1892.

All history affords no precedent for so remarkable a transformation. It is shown also by the degree to which farm mortgages have been paid up, and by the substantial improvements that have been made in farm buildings and equipment, and by the strong upward tendency to the value of farm lands, especially in the Central and Western States.

Even billions of dollars can inadequately express the improvement in agricultural values and incomes compared to the depths of the late depression. And because farmers are in this prosperous condition, and because they are the greatest consumers of manufactures, the industrial outlook is generally satisfactory and encouraging.

Here is a statement of fact by a conservative farm journal without the reasons. From 1893 to 1897 we had practical free trade. From 1897 to 1901 we had protection. No one claims, Mr. President, that the tariff has anything to do with the size of crops, but I do maintain that it has much to do with values. The 3,000,000 idle men of 1896 could not buy much bread. They could not eat as many potatoes, apples, and other products of the farm, and as we consume 90 per cent of our farm products at home, our farmers are dependent on the purchasing power of the people for both quantity disposed of and price received.

A protective tariff insures the farmer against the disaster that would otherwise attend a short crop because the people can afford to pay the enhanced price. That is why the farmer got nearly twice as much for his short corn crop of last year as he did for his good crop of 1896. I showed in this Chamber two years ago that the farmers of the country lost $10,000,000,000 because of low tariff agitation and operation. Since the Dingley law went into effect they have gained in increased prices and enhanced values much more than this amount. They have paid off mortgages to the amount of many millions; they have bought millions of dollars' worth of new machinery and implements; they have improved their property, and many farm values are to-day double what they were in 1895 and 1896.

During the fiscal year 1901 we exported nearly a billion of dollars' worth of agricultural products against a little more than half a billion dollars' worth in each of the fiscal years 1895 and 1896. The average agricultural exports during the years 1898, 1899, 1900, and 1901 exceeded $850,000,000 in value against $550,000,000 in 1895 and 1896, a gain of $200,000,000 a year, and yet the crops of 1895 and 1896 were abnormally large.

I want to emphasize this fact, Mr. President, that it is not the size of the farmer's crop, but the value of the crop which rewards his industry; and the value must and does depend on the tariff, which gives good wages the year round to all consumers. And the very prosperity which comes to the farmer goes back to the manufacturer and merchant and railroads and labor of all kinds in the increased consumption of implements, clothing, building material, and necessaries and luxuries of a thousand and one kinds. So we all become interdependent, and protection scatters its benefits and blessings far and wide.

SHEEP AND WOOL.

Free wool was one of the features of the Wilson-Gorman tariff. The Dingley law reimposed the adequate protection given by the McKinley law. Let me give a few figures showing the result, first, as regards domestic production and imports of wool:

Year.	Production.	Imports.
	Pounds.	Pounds.
1893	303,000,000	172,435,838
1894	298,000,000	55,152,558
1895	310,000,000	206,033,906
1896	273,000,000	230,911,473
1897	259,153,251	350,852,026
1898	266,720,684	132,795,302
1899	272,191,330	76,739,219
1900	288,636,621	155,918,455
1901	302,502,328	103,583,505

Nearly 800,000,000 pounds of wool were imported during the three years 1895, 1896, and 1897, and, Mr. President, I am informed that we have not used it up yet. Now, let me give a list of prices of Ohio fleece wool on the 1st of October last, as furnished by Mauger & Avery, of Boston:

Year.	Fine.	Medium.	Coarse.
	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
1893	23	24	21
1894	19	21	19
1895	18	21	19
1896	18	19	18
1897	27	29	25
1898	28½	30	24½
1899	31	33½	29
1900	26½	28½	26½
1901	25	26½	23

And it must be understood that these prices under the Dingley law have been maintained in spite of the lowest figures abroad ever known. Our woolgrowers have reaped a profit of a few cents on every pound of wool produced, while the London market has shown the greatest slump in its history. So much for wool. Now a glance at sheep and their value:

Year.	Number.	Value.
1893	47,272,553	$125,909,264
1894	45,048,017	89,186,110
1895	42,294,064	66,685,767
1896	38,298,783	65,167,735
1897	36,818,643	67,020,942
1898	37,656,690	92,721,133
1899	39,114,453	107,697,530
1900	41,883,065	122,665,913
1901	43,000,000	134,000,000

These are the very conservative figures of the Department of Agriculture. These figures of sheep and wool show just what free wool and protected wool do for the farmer. But what of our woolen industry? Closed mills and mills working part time in 1896. Busy mills in 1902. The woolen industry has been greatly depressed throughout the world because of overproduction. Our woolen manufacturers have suffered too, but not to the extent of those abroad, and the outlook is far from gloomy. Full recovery may come at any time, but it is different with the sheep industry. In this connection I want to quote a pat paragraph from a speech delivered by my friend the senior Senator from Wyoming before the Wool Manufacturers' Association at the Hotel Savoy, New York, January 9, 1901. Senator WARREN said:

> Gentlemen, woolen mills may be shut down at dark and reopened at daylight; shut down a month, or even a year, and still be there on the ground when needed for business; but sheep can not be so shut down and reopened. It takes years to recover from losses suffered, while it only takes months to effect them.

OUR TOBACCO INDUSTRY.

No one will dispute that tobacco and cigars are a luxury, and that their increased consumption must indicate increased prosperity. It will be interesting, then, to note the conditions of the industry now, as compared with low-tariff times of five years ago. The following table shows the comparison:

PRODUCTION AND CONSUMPTION OF TOBACCO IN THE UNITED STATES.

Fiscal year.	Production of cigar leaf.	Used in cigars and cigarettes.	Cigar output.
	Pounds.	Pounds.
1894	88,650,000	87,396,348	4,066,917,433
1895	66,500,000	89,680,605	4,163,972,440
1896	77,000,000	93,764,920	4,237,755,943
1897	110,662,750	90,950,987	4,063,169,097
1898	105,702,450	104,116,393	4,910,937,397
1899	147,106,050	104,589,331	5,077,287,824
1900	142,686,250	120,350,271	5,963,170,381
1901	131,444,050	128,448,475	6,475,438,411

It will be seen that our tobacco production is double what it was in 1895 or 1896, and that we are consuming about the entire output. The increase in cigar manufacture has been more than 50 per cent. The tobacco used in the cigar and cigarette output for the year ending June 30, 1901, was approximately 128,448,475 pounds. To this add 20,000,000 pounds used in smoking tobacco and 24,865,170 pounds imported, and a total of 173,313,645 pounds was apparently consumed. But on June 30, 1901, there were 17,896,518 pounds in hand, which would leave 155,417,127 as being used. Deducting 5,417,127 pounds exported, and a total of about 150,000,000 pounds would be required. This was practically the size of the domestic crop for 1899 and 1900, which brought the best price for years.

MANUFACTURES.

While the census report on manufactures for 1900 is most satisfactory, it by no means shows the full result of the operation of the Dingley law. The total value of products for 1900 is given at $13,040,013,638, as against $9,372,437,283 in 1890. We have progressed wonderfully in the last two or three years, and it is likely that the output for 1902 will exceed $15,000,000,000, which is double the output of 1895 or 1896. In spite of consolidations and combinations, the number of manufacturing establishments increased over 44 per cent in the last decade.

The following table, which I have compiled from the census report on manufactures, will show the great gain we made in our large industries during the last decade in spite of the adverse conditions of four years, affected by a low tariff law:

Manufacturing output in certain industries, 1890 and 1900.

Articles.	1890.	1900.
Agricultural implements	$81,271,651	$101,207,428
Boots and shoes, factory product	220,649,358	261,028,580
Carriages and wagons	114,551,907	121,537,276
Cars, etc	129,461,698	218,238,277
Chemical products	174,699,079	202,582,396
Cotton manufactures	267,981,724	339,198,619
Flouring and grist mill products	513,971,474	560,719,063
Iron and steel	478,687,519	835,759,034
Leather	171,063,337	204,038,127
Liquors	289,775,639	340,615,466
Lumber and timber products	437,957,382	596,832,984
Paper and pulp	78,937,184	127,286,162
Printing and publishing	179,859,750	222,983,569
Shipbuilding	38,065,410	74,578,158
Silk and silk goods	87,298,454	107,256,258
Slaughtering	561,611,668	786,603,670
Wool manufactures	345,655,524	400,063,833

These are but a few of our principal industries in which I wish I could make the comparison between 1902 and 1896. To some extent this can be done in our iron and steel manufactures.

While we have made wonderful progress in all lines of manufacturing since the enactment of the Dingley law, it is in iron and steel products that we have made the largest gains. This can be shown in no better way than by a comparison of pig-iron production for the past few years. It has been as follows:

	Tons of 2,240 pounds.
1894	6,657,388
1895	9,446,308
1896	8,623,127
1897	9,652,680
1898	11,773,934
1899	13,620,703
1900	13,789,242
1901	15,878,354

This year the amount will exceed 17,000,000 tons, or nearly three times the production of 1894.

The total production of all kinds of iron and steel rolled into finished forms in the United States since 1892 can be seen from the following table, taken from the Annual Report of the Iron and Steel Association:

Production of rolled iron and steel, gross tons, 1892–1902.

Year.	Iron and steel rails.	Bars, hoops, skelp, and shapes.	Wire rods.	Plates and sheets, except nail plate.	Cut nails.	Total.
1892	1,551,844	3,033,439	627,829	751,460	201,242	6,165,814
1893	1,136,458	2,491,497	537,272	674,345	136,113	4,975,685
1894	1,021,772	2,155,875	673,402	682,900	108,262	4,642,211
1895	1,306,135	3,005,765	791,130	991,459	95,085	6,189,574
1896	1,122,010	2,731,932	623,986	965,776	72,137	5,515,841
1897	1,647,892	3,081,760	979,736	1,207,286	94,054	7,001,728
1898	1,981,241	3,941,957	1,071,683	1,448,301	70,188	8,513,370
1899	2,272,700	4,996,801	1,036,398	1,903,505	85,015	10,294,419
1900	2,385,682	4,390,697	846,291	1,794,528	70,245	9,487,443
1901	2,874,639	5,785,479	1,365,934	2,254,425	68,850	12,349,327

This shows an increase of over 100 per cent since 1895–96. Cut nails have given way to wire nails, the production of which has grown enormously since adequate protection was given to the industry in 1883. The following table shows the result:

Production of wire nails in kegs of 100 pounds.

1882	50,000	1892	4,719,524
1883	80,000	1893	5,095,985
1884	120,000	1894	5,681,801
1885	200,000	1895	5,841,403
1886	300,000	1896	4,719,860
1887	500,000	1897	8,997,245
1888	1,000,000	1898	7,418,475
1889	2,200,000	1899	7,618,130
1890	3,500,000	1900	7,233,979
1891	4,114,385	1901	9,803,822

The price in 1883 was 8.35 cents per pound, and in 1902, 2.45 cents per pound.

Another more recent but none the less remarkable instance of an industry made possible by protection is our tin-plate industry, due to the McKinley law. The following table shows the change in our production and importations:

Production and importation of tin plate.

Year.	Imports.	Production.
	Gross tons.	Gross tons.
1890	329,435	None.
1891	327,882	999
1892	268,472	18,803
1893	253,155	55,182
1894	215,068	74,260
1895	219,545	113,606
1896	119,171	160,362
1897	83,851	256,598
1898	66,775	326,915
1899	58,915	360,875
1900	66,055	302,665
1901	52,625	399,291

So great is our production of iron and steel that we can not supply the demand at any price, and we are forced to importations.

Our exports of manufactures, although but a small per cent of our production, show a remarkable advance under the Dingley tariff, as will be seen from the following table:

	Value.
1893	$158,023,118
1894	183,728,808
1895	183,595,743
1896	228,571,178
1897	277,285,391
1898	290,697,354
1899	339,592,146
1900	433,851,756
1901	412,155,066

For the present year the value will be about the same as last year in spite of a decrease in price in many commodities and the falling off in iron and steel exports, due to home consumption. The manufacturing situation to-day in the United States can be summed up in the statement that practically every mill and factory and shop is working to full capacity, with orders far ahead and prices most satisfactory.

In connection with this subject of our manufactures I want to call attention to the fact that the large increase is not confined to the great manufacturing States of the East. Let me show what our Territories are doing. Here are the figures from the Census Bureau:

Territory.	Value of product.		Increase, per cent.
	1900.	1890.
Arizona	$21,315,189	$947,547	2,150
New Mexico	5,605,795	1,516,195	270
Indian Territory	3,892,181	248,932	1,464
Oklahoma	7,083,938	180,445	3,826
Total	37,897,103	2,893,119	1,210

Here also are the figures from three States that confirm my contention that protection is spreading its benefits in every part of the land:

State.	Value of product.		Increase, per cent.
	1900.	1890.
Idaho	$4,020,532	$1,396,096	188
Nevada	1,643,673	1,105,063	49
Wyoming	4,301,240	2,367,601	82

As showing how wages in manufacturing affect value of farm products, I want to present the following figures from the census report of Arizona:

	1900.	1890.	Increase, per cent.
Wages	$2,369,065	$302,146	684
Farm products	6,179,397	1,045,970	480

The argument holds good in Arizona as well as Massachusetts and every other section of the country.

BEET SUGAR.

An industry made possible by the Dingley law was the manufacture of sugar from beets. The progress made is seen in the following figures:

	1896-97.	1901-2.
Number of factories	7	42
Tons produced	40,000	185,000

The new plants projected for 1902 number 83, with a capital of $50,000,000, capable of a total output of 550,000 tons annually and a purchasing capacity of $20,000,000 worth of sugar beets.

MINERAL PRODUCTS.

Our mining statistics show the same substantial increase as our agriculture and manufacturing. I give simply a comparison between 1896 and 1901 in a few products and the total value:

	1896.	1901.
Gold	$53,000,000	$83,000,000
Iron ore	23,000,000	75,000,000
Coal	196,000,000	325,000,000
Stone	30,000,000	55,000,000
Total mineral products	622,000,000	1,200,000,000

The iron ore, coal, and stone are put into use as fast as mined, and add most materially to our manufacturing and building output. We have almost doubled the value of our mineral products under the demands of industry made possible by a return to protection, and the mining, transportation, and conversion into a useable commodity, consisting, as it does, of so much increased labor, is but another testimony to the benefits of the Dingley law.

RAILROAD BUSINESS.

The effect of the great consumption of farm products and manufactures is nowhere more apparent than in the enormous railroad business of the country. We have now passed the 200,000 mark in system mileage and are approaching 300,000 in total miles of track. Over 1,000,000 men are employed with annual wages exceeding $600,000,000. The railroad systems of the country represent a capital of $12,000,000,000, with annual earnings exceeding $1,500,000,000. Six hundred million passengers are carried annually and over 1,100,000,000 tons of freight. I want now, Mr. President, to show the difference between railroad business in this country during low tariff times and protection times. The following table will show statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission and Poor's Manual:

LOW-TARIFF PERIOD.

Years.	Freight carried, tons.	Miles built.	Dividends paid.	Gross receipts.
1895	696,761,171	1,650	$81,685,774	$1,092,395,437
1896	765,891,385	1,704	81,528,154	1,125,632,025
1897	741,705,946	1,818	83,680,040	1,132,866,626
Average	734,786,164	1,724	82,297,989	1,116,964,696

PROTECTIVE-TARIFF PERIOD.

1898	879,006,307	2,215	$94,937,526	$1,249,358,724
1899	959,763,583	3,966	109,032,252	1,336,096,379
1900	1,101,680,238	3,503	140,343,653	1,501,695,378
1901	[a]1,350,000,000	5,057
Average	1,072,612,542	3,685	114,771,144	1,362,450,227

[a] Estimated.

LOW-TARIFF PERIOD.

1895	$445,508,261	785,094	0.839
1896	468,824,531	826,620	.806
1897	465,601,581	823,476	.798
Average	459,978,124	811,710	.814

PROTECTIVE-TARIFF PERIOD.

1898	$495,055,618	874,558	0.753
1899	522,967,896	928,924	.724
1900	577,264,841	1,017,653	.729
1901	[a]634,000,000
Average	557,072,091	940,378	.735

I regret exceedingly that I can not get the exact figures for 1901 and an estimate for the present year, for they would show a most substantial increase over 1900. Enough is known, however, to warrant the statement that our railroad business is now more than 50 per cent better in every way than during the low-tariff period.

The railroad business is the index of the country's progress and prosperity. It is dependent upon the demand made by consumers and the supply of producers. It is a fact that for three years our railroads have been pushed to their very utmost facilities of rolling stock. A car famine is the only famine we have known under the Dingley law. Locomotives and freight cars can not be made fast enough with all the facilities of our great locomotive and car works.

Our free traders delight in calling our railroads a "nonprotected" industry, and yet there is no business in the country that shows so quickly and so substantially the effect of the tariff as the railroads. Why did the freight business practically stand still during the operation of the Wilson-Gorman law? Why has it increased at the rate of 15 to 20 per cent yearly under the Dingley law and would increase even more rapidly if cars and locomotives could be had? Why were so many railroads in the hands of receivers in 1896 and so few in receivers' hands in 1902? Why have the value of railroad stocks increased so enormously in the past five years? Do not tell me these are fictitious values or I shall point to the dividends now paid as compared with 1896—fully 100 per cent more. And to whom are these dividends paid? From the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission I take these figures for 1900:

Stocks outstanding	$5,845,579,593
Owned by railway corporations	1,470,218,972
Not owned by railway corporations	4,375,360,621
Bonds	4,900,626,823
Owned by railway corporations	472,831,377
Not owned by railway corporations	4,427,795,446
Total stocks and bonds	10,746,206,416
Owned by railway corporations	1,943,050,349
Not owned by railway corporations	8,803,156,067

Who owns the railroads, then? Let me give a few figures:

	Stockholders.
New York Central	15,000
Pennsylvania	28,000
New York, New Haven and Hartford	10,000
Union Pacific	14,000
Chicago, Burlington and Quincy	13,000
Northern Pacific	10,000
Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe	13,000
Illinois Central	5,000
Southern Railway	4,700
Erie	3,450

And so on, and the dividends are scattered through thousands of different channels, carrying income and support to a quarter million of people, besides the millions concerned in the earnings of over a million employees.

SHIPPING.

I have shown the wonderful progress made in railroading during the past few years. I now wish to present some figures showing the remarkable increase in tonnage of our merchant marine. The figures are from the report of the Bureau of Navigation:

Year ending June 30—	Vessels built and total tonnage.				Tonnage of merchant marine of the United States.	Per cent of foreign trade carried in American vessels.
	Sailing.	Canal boats and barges.	Steam.	Total.
	Gross tons.	Gross tons.	Gross tons.	Gross tons.
1890	102,873	32,204	159,046	294,123	4,424,497	12.9
1891	144,290	39,975	185,037	369,202	4,684,759	12.5
1892	83,217	23,885	92,531	199,633	4,764,921	12.3
1893	49,348	27,923	124,368	211,639	4,825,071	12.2
1894	37,827	9,648	83,720	131,195	4,684,029	13.3
1895	34,900	6,949	69,753	111,602	4,635,960	11.7
1896	65,237	23,832	138,028	227,097	4,703,880	12
1897	64,309	61,770	106,153	232,232	4,769,020	11
1898	34,416	40,204	105,838	180,458	4,749,738	9.3
1899	98,073	50,907	151,058	300,038	4,864,238	8.9
1900	116,460	44,802	202,528	393,790	5,164,839	9.3
1901	126,165	83,733	273,591	483,489	5,524,218	8.2

It will be seen that we were doing very well during the operation of the McKinley law, but what a collapse under the Wilson-Gorman law. Now note the advance under the Dingley tariff. Our tonnage built last year was four times that built in 1895. It will be seen that over 90 per cent of our foreign trade is carried in foreign bottoms, so that our tonnage of merchant marine is used almost wholly in coast and lake commerce. The enormous increase in tonnage, then, gives a pretty accurate idea of the increase in our coast and lake traffic.

BANK CLEARANCES.

Our bank clearings represent the volume of business transacted, as about 98 per cent of settlements are made by bank checks and credits which are recorded in the clearing houses of the country. Here, then, we get a basis of relative business done; and to show the comparison I present the total bank clearings since 1892, taken from the figures of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department:

	Bank clearances.		Bank clearances.
1892	$60,833,572,438	1897	$54,179,545,030
1893	58,880,682,455	1898	65,924,820,769
1894	45,028,496,746	1899	88,909,661,776
1895	50,975,155,046	1900	84,582,450,081
1896	51,935,651,733	1901	114,190,226,021

It will be seen how business fell off in 1893 and 1894 when we were threatened with free trade and begun to live under the operation of the Wilson-Gorman law. We recovered but little in the next two years, and 1897 found us doing less business than in 1892. But note the result since, under the workings of the Dingley tariff. Observe the great increases each year, till in 1901 we find the clearings more than double what they were in 1895 or 1896. These are the records of actual business transactions, for bank balances are computed to a cent. The clearings for the first four months of 1902 were $39,000,000,000, showing that we are about equaling the record-breaking figures of last year. We are almost doubling the figures of 1892, a most astonishing result. In this connection, I may say that the clearings of New York City in 1902 are 60 per cent larger than the clearings of London, though the latter city has a million more population and does most of the business of England.

POST-OFFICE BUSINESS.

From bank clearings to postage stamps is a wide step, but I want to emphasize the value of a protective tariff in small transactions as well as great. It would seem as if one need never to retrench in the matter of postage, no matter how poor the times may be. The constant increase in population makes an increase in postal revenues almost imperative, and yet the little 1 and 2 cent stamps, like everything else, show the difference between adversity and prosperity. I present herewith a table showing our postal receipts for a period of years from 1889 to 1902:

1889	$56,175,611	1896	$82,499,208
1890	60,882,097	1897	82,665,463
1891	65,931,786	1898	89,012,619
1892	70,930,476	1899	95,021,384
1893	75,896,933	1900	102,254,579
1894	75,080,479	1901	111,631,193
1895	76,983,128	1902	[a]122,680,000

[a] Estimated from ten months.

Here (from 1889 to 1893) is the constant increase we should look for. In 1894 there is an actual decrease and no material increase the year following. In short, the average annual increase from 1893 to 1897 is only $1,689,633, really a falling off considering the increase in population. But look at the result since the Dingley law went into effect. An increase of over $40,000,000, or an average of $8,000,000 a year. We are increasing our expenditures largely every year, and yet our revenues are increasing still more rapidly till soon we will have a self-supporting department and ultimately 1 cent postage.

Our rural free delivery is being rapidly extended till soon every farmer in the land will have his daily mail delivered at his door, giving him his daily paper, daily weather and crop reports, and making him more expert in his labor, more intelligent, and more prosperous and happy. Thus protection scatters its blessings with the increased sales of the postage stamps as it does with the ton of rails or the huge locomotive.

TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE.

Somewhat akin to postal business is that of our telegraph and telephone companies. To many the telegraph and telephone message is a necessity; to others it is a convenience; to others a luxury. In a most peculiar and significant way, then, the statistics tell the story of prosperity. The following table shows the receipts of the Western Union Telegraph Company since 1889:

1889	$20,783,194	1896	$22,612,736
1890	22,337,029	1897	22,638,859
1891	23,034,327	1898	23,915,733
1892	23,706,405	1899	23,954,312
1893	24,978,443	1900	24,758,570
1894	21,852,655	1901	23,354,151
1895	22,218,019	1902	[a]27,850,000

[a] Estimated.

As in everything else, we see an increase up to 1893, then a decrease till 1897, then a most substantial increase since. This increase during the operation of the Dingley law has been in spite of a most phenomenal increase in telephone business, an increase in the Postal Telegraph Company's business, and private-wire business. This increase in telephone business can be seen from the following table, showing subscribers and employees since 1894:

Calendar year.	Subscribers.	Employees.
1894	237,186	10,421
1895	243,432	11,094
1896	281,695	11,930
1897	325,244	14,425
Average annual increase	29,353	1,335
1898	384,230	16,682
1899	465,180	19,668
1900	632,946	25,741
1901	800,880	32,837
Average annual increase	138,883	5,385

These figures show nearly five times the annual increase under the Dingley law as compared with the years under the Wilson-Gorman tariff. And right here I want to show a comparison of the annual number of telephone messages in different countries according to the latest available statistics:

Austria-Hungary, 1899	116,724,879
Russia, 1898	103,426,088
Germany, 1899	540,324,386
France, 1898	141,226,883
Great Britain, 1900	639,476,448
United States, 1901	2,300,000,000

We do more telephoning than all the rest of the world put together at from 5 to 10 cents a message. All this has been made possible by the great prosperity brought to us by the Dingley tariff law.

SAVINGS AND SURPLUS.

Our savings-banks deposits represent a portion of the surplus earnings of the masses. The capitalist, the manufacturer, and the merchant do not use the savings banks. It is the wage-earner who uses that depository for a part of his surplus funds, and now, Mr. President, I want to show just what the amount of these savings have been during the past ten years:

Year.	Number of depositors.	Deposits.
1893	4,830,599	$1,785,150,957
1894	4,777,687	1,747,961,280
1895	4,875,519	1,810,597,023
1896	5,065,494	1,907,156,277
1897	5,201,132	1,939,376,035
1898	5,385,746	2,065,631,298
1899	5,687,818	2,230,366,954
1900	6,107,083	2,449,547,885
1901	6,373,098	2,601,189,291
1902	6,784,392	2,845,691,300

Including the savings in State banks, there are now over $3,000,000,000 of savings in the banks of the country against but little more than half that sum in 1894. It will be seen that in 1894 millions were withdrawn from the savings banks and from 1893 to 1897 the increase was only $154,225,078, or an average increase of $38,556,245 a year, while from 1897 to the present time the increase has been $906,315,265, or an average of $181,263,053 a year. This is a small part of what protection is doing for the people. And this is by no means idle money. Every dollar of it is at once put into use. It is loaned on bond and mortgage and is employed in buying construction and building material, and in State, and county, and municipal improvements—in the employment of labor at every turn.

My own State, New Hampshire, has had an interesting experience in the matter of savings bank deposits. For the years 1894, 1895, 1896, and 1897 there was an aggregate decrease of deposits to the enormous amount of $13,222,416, while for the years 1900 and 1901 there has been an increase of $1,988,829.

But these savings banks deposits by no means measure the surplus of the people's earnings. There are the building and loan associations, the insurance premium, the installments paid on the little home and on the furniture, the money spent for educating the children, and for the luxuries and ornaments of the body and home. Three billion dollars of savings put away for a rainy day and increasing at the rate of $200,000,000 a year, and we are by no means a provident people. We are the most extravagant people on earth, and we can afford to be under a protective tariff. It may be said that our deposits are larger than those of any other country because of our larger population. Let me give a table showing the average to each depositor in a few countries:

United States	$408	Belgium	$76
United Kingdom	96	Italy	80
Russia	100	Prussia	155
France	83	Germany	87

Whether we take total deposits, number of depositors, average to each depositor, or deposits per capita, the United States is not only far in the lead, but increasing faster than any other country.

Our deposits exceed those of Great Britain, France, Russia, and Austria combined, and these countries have a population four times as large as that of the United States.

INSURANCE.

I have shown, Mr. President, that we have nearly $3,000,000,000 deposited in our savings banks by almost 7,000,000 depositors and that we are adding $200,000,000 a year, and yet the insurance premium is but another form of savings bank, and we are paying annual premiums and assessments upon life insurance to the amount of $400,000,000. Let me present some of the insurance figures since 1893 that we may compare low-tariff times with protection times. The statistics are from the New York Insurance Report, but refer to the total business of the United States:

Year.	Policies issued.		Total income.
	Number.	Amount of insurance.
1893	404,236	$1,058,659,846	$236,683,206
1894	336,843	985,520,033	253,624,478
1895	366,595	864,815,534	266,897,202
1896	350,106	796,124,326	279,373,107
1897	431,457	923,804,876	301,268,179
1898	485,735	1,018,366,627	320,810,628
1899	632,704	1,304,306,628	355,946,005
1900	687,005	1,356,769,653	392,358,941
1901	787,747	1,470,317,887	437,935,469

In 1894, 1895, and 1896 there was a decrease each year in number of policies issued and amount of insurance written. Policies lapsed by the thousands, and the loss was incalculable. Now look at the figures since 1896, a constant and large increase each year. More than double the number of policies were written in 1901 than were written in 1896. Nearly double the amount of insurance. This is a most significant showing. It means hundreds of millions for widows and orphans when the income earner is taken away.

From 75 to 80 per cent of the income of our insurance companies is from premiums, and here is an addition of nearly $400,000,000 a year to the $200,000,000 annual increase in savings, all to be loaned on bond and mortgage, to be put into commercial use, and most of it to find its way into the laborer's envelope. Thirteen billion dollars of life insurance in force in the United States—more than double that of all the world put together. But this is not all. We have over $23,268,047,232 of fire risks in force, and nearly $100,000,000 are paid in fire losses every year.

But it is not alone the man who has an increased income in good times who benefits from a tariff like the Dingley law. The man with a fixed income year after year benefits relatively just as much. In low-tariff times he is called upon by every relative and friend who is out of work, and his income is cut down correspondingly. Every man who was "touched" a dozen times a week in 1895 and 1896 appreciates this point in these days when there are no appeals from broken and hard-luck sources.

FOREIGN COMMERCE.

I have given glimpses of our domestic trade under the Dingley tariff and the wonderful advances we have made under protection. How about our foreign trade—the sale of our surplus abroad? In order that we may consider the matter intelligently, I present a table showing our exports and imports since 1890, taking my figures from the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department:

Imports and exports of merchandise, 1890-1901.

Year ending June 30—	Imports.	Exports.	Total imports and exports.	Excess.
				Imports.	Exports.
1890	$789,810,409	$857,828,684	$1,647,139,093		$68,518,275

1899	697,148,489	1,227,023,302	1,924,171,791		529,874,813
1900	849,714,329	1,394,479,214	2,244,193,543		544,764,885
1901	823,171,165	1,487,764,991	2,310,937,156		664,592,826

The figures for the fiscal year 1902, while they will show a falling off in exports (owing to our short corn crop of last year and the great home consumption of manufactures) and an increase of imports, will compare favorably with recent years. Under the operation of the Dingley tariff we have become the leading export nation of the world, passing Great Britain, with her wonderful prestige of centuries. It will be seen that our balance of trade differs very much now from the years 1893 to 1897. In 1893 the balance was against us, and for the five years from 1893 to 1897, inclusive, the average was only $175,000,000, while during the past five years the average has been about $600,000,000, making a total favorable balance under the five years of the Dingley law of $3,000,000,000.

We are changing under this trade balance from a debtor nation to a creditor nation, if, indeed, we have not already done so. We have an immense freight bill to pay annually, large interest disbursements, and exchanges on account of tourists' expenses abroad, so that with much less than our favorable balance we would have to ship gold abroad in large quantities to pay our bill, as we have had to do in low-tariff times. It will be seen from the table that our exports are nearly double those of 1895. Nearly $1,000,000,000, or two-thirds, are agricultural products, which Europe must have regardless of tariffs, and yet it is in exports of manufacture that we have made the largest relative gain.

We are exporting double the amount of manufactured articles that we were under the Wilson-Gorman law, and we are gaining markets in every quarter of the globe for every product of our mills and factories, and still the free trader keeps up the cry for "free raw material," in order that we may capture the markets of the world, ignorant or forgetful of the fact that we have already 99 per cent free raw material for all that enters into exports of manufactures.

Right here I want to call attention to our great increase in imports, this increase consisting mostly of crude or partly manufactured articles which are consumed by our manufacturers in turning out their finished product. Thus we see the perfect workings of the Dingley law in our exports and imports. It is safe to say that in another half decade, if our present tariff law is undisturbed, our exports will exceed $2,000,000,000 annually, which, while but a small amount as compared with our domestic trade, is still a remarkable exhibition of American progress.

GOLD AND SILVER.

I now wish to present a table showing our imports and exports of gold and silver for recent years. Trade balances are not settled wholly in gold. There are credits and exchanges to be considered, but I notice that our gold generally goes abroad in low-tariff times and comes back in protection times. Here are the figures under the Wilson-Gorman law and the Dingley law:

Total value of imports and exports of gold and silver coin and bullion, 1893-1901.

GOLD.

Year ending June 30—	Imports.	Exports.	Excess of—
			Imports over exports.	Exports over imports.
1893	$21,174,381	$108,680,844		$87,506,463

SILVER.

Year ending June 30—	Imports.	Exports.	Excess of exports over imports.
1893	$23,193,252	$40,737,319	$17,544,067
1894	13,286,552	50,451,265	37,164,713
1895	20,211,179	47,295,286	27,084,107
1896	28,277,186	60,541,670	31,764,484
1897	30,533,227	61,946,638	31,413,411
1898	30,927,781	55,105,239	24,177,458
1899	30,675,056	56,319,055	25,643,999
1900	35,256,302	56,712,275	21,455,973
1901	36,386,521	64,285,180	27,898,659

Silver is a commodity, and the excess of exports should be added to our trade balance, but gold is the commodity or money used in settlement. It will be seen that in the four years 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896 we exported over $200,000,000 more than we imported, while in the four years 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900 we imported over $200,000,000 in excess of the amount exported.

The gold holdings of the United States now aggregate $555,000,000, not only the largest amount of gold ever held by the Treasury, but for the first time the outstanding gold certificates exceed in volume the amount of United States notes or greenbacks. No longer ago than 1899 the outstanding certificates amounted to only $34,500,000; now they amount to $347,000,000. In 1892 the circulation of gold certificates rose to $171,700,000, but during the free-trade panic the circulation fell to $70,000,000. Our $555,000,000 of gold is the largest amount possessed by any government in the world.

FAILURES.

With such phenomenal advances in all branches of business, with such a great amount of increased capital invested and concerns in operation, we should almost expect to find an increased number of failures, for suspensions and failures in business are as inevitable as sickness and death in the most healthful communities. But sickness and the death rate depend to a degree on sanitary and other conditions, and suspension and failures in business depend, it would seem by the figures I now present, on tariff conditions.

I take the following statistics of failures from Dun's Review:

Failures.

Calendar year.	Number.	Liabilities.
1892	10,344	$114,044,167
1893	15,242	346,779,889
1894	13,885	172,992,856
1895	13,197	173,196,060
1896	15 088	226,096,834
1897	13,351	154,332,071
1898	12,186	130,662,899
1899	9,337	90,879,889
1900	10,774	138,495,673
1901	11,002	113,092,376

These I assert are most significant figures. In 1892 the number and amount of liabilities were normal. In 1893, with the assurance of some kind of a free-trade law, came panic and ruin. The figures tell the story. In 1894 and 1895 the figures, while a decrease from 1893, were still abnormal, but 1896 was another bad year with nearly as many failures as in 1893, though with somewhat lesser liabilities. But what a change with the coming of protection. Look at the figures for the past five years. The amount of liabilities for the four years 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896 average $229,000,000 a year, while for the four years 1898, 1899, 1900, and 1901 they average only half as much in spite of the enormous increase in business enterprises. No argument I could make would teach a greater lesson than the figures themselves.

AVERAGE RATE OF DUTY.

I now want to call attention, Mr. President, to the free-trade assertion that the rates of duty under the Dingley law are exorbitant.

The average ad valorem rate of duty is not determined by legislation, but by actual imports. The ignorant free-trader, in a spasm of assumed indignation, may declare that Dingley duties are the highest ever imposed, but he either does not know what he is talking about or he is deliberately trying to deceive.

It will be both interesting and instructive to see just what the rate has been under the Dingley law, and compare it with the rate of preceding laws.

For the four years ending June 30, 1901, the average ad valorem rates of duty on all imports were: 1898, 24.77; 1899, 29.48; 1900, 27.62, and 1901, 28.91 per cent. For 1902 the rate will be about 29 per cent. So we may safely average the rate under the five years at 28 per cent. This compares with about 21 per cent under the three years of the Wilson-Gorman Act. But how does it compare with former protective years? From 1870 to 1890 the rates were as follows:

1870	42.23	1880	29.07
1871	38.94	1881	29.75
1872	37	1882	30.11
1873	26.95	1883	29.92
1874	26.88	1884	28.44
1875	28.20	1885	30.59
1876	30.19	1886	30.13
1877	26.68	1887	31.02
1878	27.13	1888	29.99
1879	28.97	1889	29.50

This is an average of over 31 per cent for the twenty years. This, then, disproves the statement that Dingley rates are excessive. In only four years out of the twenty—from 1870 to 1890—were they so low as the average Dingley rate. This proves that tariff framing is a science, and that the Dingley tariff is not only a wise and equitable measure, but a scientific measure.

Again, as regards duties collected. I have already shown that as a revenue measure the Dingley law is giving us a large and ample amount of duty. But how does it average among the people? The per capita duty collected under the Dingley law has been as follows: 1898, $1.99; 1899, $2.72; 1900, $3.01; 1901, $3.06, and for 1902 it will be about $3.10. So, leaving out the first year, when the amount of duty was low and abnormal, we have an average per capita annual duty of less than $3.

Now, taking the years from 1870 to 1890, we find the per capita duty to be—

1870	$4.96	1880	$3.64
1871	5.12	1881	3.78
1872	5.23	1882	4.12
1873	4.44	1883	3.92
1874	3.75	1884	3.47
1875	3.51	1885	3.17
1876	3.22	1886	3.30
1877	2.77	1887	3.65
1878	2.67	1888	3.60
1879	2.73	1889	3.60

or an average duty of $3.73 per capita. And so another "burden of the people" is dissipated.

Even if the entire tariff tax were borne by consumers, which is by no means the case, we are each taxed only $3 a year (and actually not more than $2) for the blessings and benefits of Dingleyism.

The proportion of the free imports is nearly 50 per cent, and was over 50 per cent under the McKinley law, while from 1870 to 1890 it was only about 30 per cent. So, whether we consider the Dingley law from the standpoint of duty rate, per capita duty, or per cent of free imports, we find it to be the most just and equitable measure ever framed.

SOME PER CAPITA FIGURES.

To show that our great progress under the Dingley law has far outstripped our rate of increase in population, I will present a few per capita statistics, as an example of all, from 1896 to and including 1901:

Per capita statistics.

Year.	Population.	Amount of money in United States July 1.	Money in circulation July 1.	Debt, less in Treasury, July 1.	Interest on public debt year ending June 30.	Exports.	Post-office.
							Revenue.	Expenditures.
1896	70,254,000	$25.62	$21.44	$13.60	$0.49	$12.29	$1.17	$1.34
1897	71,592,000	26.62	22.91	13.78	.48	14.42	1.15	1.34
1898	72,947,000	28.43	25.19	14.08	.47	16.59	1.22	1.39
1899	74,318,000	29.47	25.62	15.55	.54	16.20	1.28	1.41
1900	76,303,387	30.66	26.93	14.52	.44	17.96	1.34	1.46
1901	77,647,000	31.98	28.02	13.45	.38	18.81	1.44	1.49

PRICES.

Mr. President, I have shown many of the blessings, benefits, and advantages of living under the Dingley tariff. Are there any disadvantages? At once I hear the freetrader cry, "How about prices? Isn't it costing us more to live than we can make in increased earnings?" I answer, No! The savings banks deposits of $200,000,000 a year answer, No! The $400,000,000 annual premiums on life insurance answer, No! The mortgages released answer, No! The installments paid on the home and the furniture answer, No! The luxuries enjoyed answer, No! And all these come out of the surplus after the necessaries have been provided.

When we have low prices and low wages and no wages, there is no surplus and there are no luxuries. It is hard enough scraping to get the necessaries. But prices of many things have risen while other prices have fallen. And right here let me emphasize the fact that the prices of the greatest and most extensive commodity in the land, a commodity that comprises 90 per cent of all production—American labor—has increased since the Dingley law went into operation fully 50 per cent.

I have shown that the railroad employees of the country are getting 50 per cent more pay than in 1895-96. I have shown that the workingmen of all classes in Massachusetts are getting from 40 to 50 per cent more earnings than in 1896. I have shown that the farmers of the country are getting from 50 to 100 per cent more for their products than in 1896. And so I believe that the income of the people of the United States is to-day much more than 50 per cent greater than it was in the summer of 1896 when one of the framers of the Wilson-Gorman law, under which we were then trying to exist, was asking the people to make him President instead of William McKinley.

No; we are not living in cheap times. Protection does not breed cheapness. It tends to make prices equitable to both producer and consumer, but the millennium has not yet come, and so we find occasional wrong and injustice, and sometimes the price of a single commodity will be exorbitant for a period till the abnormal conditions are adjusted by the inexorable process of demand, supply, and competition. Sometimes it is one thing, sometimes it is another. It may be coal or meat, or it may be ice or eggs, but whatever the commodity or the cause it is only temporary.

But suppose steel rails are $5 or $10 a ton more than they were in 1896. Is the railroad passenger paying any more for his fare? Is the freight shipper paying any more for carrying his products? No; they are paying less, and the dividends to stockholders are greater.

Protection is the great leveler; but it levels up, not down. I now want to present the following from Dun's Review, an absolutely impartial source. It explains itself fully:

PRICES PROPORTIONED TO CONSUMPTION.

In the following table the course of prices of commodities is shown, with due allowance for the relative importance of each. Quotations of all the necessaries of life are taken, including whisky and tobacco, and in each case the price is multiplied by the annual per capita consumption, which precludes any one commodity having more than its proper weight in the aggregate. For example, the price of a bushel of wheat is multiplied by 5.55, representing the annual per capita consumption of 4¼ bushels for food, and the remainder as allowance for seed. The price per pound of coffee is taken 9 times, of cheese 2.3, of chemicals only fractions of an ounce in some cases.

Thus, wide fluctuations in the price of an article little used do not materially affect the index, but changes in the great staples have a large influence in advancing or depressing the total. For convenience of comparison and economy of space the prices are grouped in seven classes: Breadstuffs include many quotations of wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, beans, and pease; meats include live hogs, beef, sheep, and many provisions, lard, tallow, etc.; dairy and garden products embrace eggs, vegetables, fruits, milk, butter, cheese, etc.; other food includes fish, liquors, condiments, sugar, rice, tobacco, etc.; clothing covers the raw material of each industry, and many quotations of woolen, cotton, silk, and rubber goods, as well as hides, leather, boots, and shoes; metals include various quotations of pig iron, and partially manufactured and finished products, as well as the minor metals, tin, lead, copper, etc., and coal and petroleum; miscellaneous includes many grades of hard and soft lumber, lath, brick, lime, glass, turpentine, hemp, linseed oil, paints, fertilizers, and drugs.

The chief advance in the general level as compared with the low-record prices of July 1, 1897, will be found in the first three classes. Short crops due to drought and the seasonable advance in eggs and similar articles make the present position of food stuffs abnormal. The third decimal is given for accuracy of comparison, thus $101.587 representing $101.58 and seven-tenths of a cent. This figure does not purport to show the exact average annual cost of living on January 1, 1902, because wholesale prices are taken and all luxuries omitted. Its economic value is in showing the percentage of advance or decline from month to month.

Year.	Breadstuffs.	Meats.	Dairy and garden.	Other food.	Clothing.	Metals.	Miscellaneous.	Total.
1888	$18.565	$8.920	$15.030	$10.340	$15.140	$17.330	$14.577	$99.902

1898	13.511	7.396	12.371	8.312	14.654	11.572	12.184	79.940
1899	13.816	7.520	11.458	9.096	14.150	11.843	12.540	80.423
1900	13.254	7.258	13.702	9.200	17.484	18.085	16.312	95.295
1901	14.486	8.407	15.556	9.504	16.024	15.810	15.881	95.668
1902	20.002	9.670	15.248	8.952	15.547	15.375	16.793	101.587

It will be seen that the total is but little above that of 1888 and 1889. Curiously, too, the index figure for 1892 is less than for any of the four preceding years and lower than the year following, and yet in 1892 we elected a low-tariff Administration in all three branches of the Government because of the false ery of high prices. In this connection I want to quote from an address delivered by T. Z. Cowles, editor of the American Economist, before the Society of Political Inquiry at Morristown, N. J., April 11, 1902. And right here I want to acknowledge my indebtedness to the American Economist and the American Protective Tariff League for much of the information I have used in this speech.

Speaking of prices, Mr. Cowles said:

The American wage-earner is not finding very much fault. Zealous friends on the free-trade side are doing their utmost to convince him that he is being crucified for the benefit of the trusts, and that the cost of living has far exceeded any gain made in the shape of better wages, but they are not making very much headway in carrying that conviction to the mind of the wage-earner. In reply, he has only to point to the enormous increase of nearly 100 per cent in the last five years of deposits in the savings banks throughout the country, and to an equal increase of investments in building and loan associations. That certainly would not seem to indicate that the wage-earner was getting very greatly the worst of the situation.

One thing the wage-earner knows—that it is not so much the price of an article as the ability to pay the price that concerns him. If he can buy a suit of clothes for $4 and does not have the $4 in his pocket, the price is of very little consequence to him; but if the suit of clothes costs $5 and he now has $6 in his pocket, he can look upon the situation with perfect complacency. Statistics of the census covering the year 1900 show in every State of the Union thus far enumerated not only an increase in the general rate of wages, but a very much larger increase in the gross sum of wages paid out. That is to say, while the per capita rate of wages has undoubtedly increased in the period of prosperity brought about by the protection, the gross sum of employment has enormously increased. That is what counts.

NATIONAL FINANCES.

I have shown what protection has done for agriculture and manufactures, for our railroads and our foreign commerce. I now want to note its effect upon our national debt and finances. From the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury I quote the following:

On April 1, 1898, the interest-bearing debt of the United States was $847,366,680. Incidental to the war with Spain the debt was increased, so that on November 1, 1899, its highest point, the amount stood at $1,046,049,020. Two years later, on November 15, 1901, the debt stood at $954,027,150, showing a reduction of $92,021,870.

This statement covers only the face amount of the debt. Interest is as much a part of the debt as is the principal, and this feature of the debt has been anticipated and paid to an amount nearly as great as has been the reduction of the principal. By the application of $43,582,004 of the public moneys, interest to the amount of $54,548,424, which would otherwise have been a charge against the Treasury during the next seven years, has been paid, so that, broadly speaking, the public debt within two years has been reduced by the sum of $146,570,294.

But this by no means tells the whole story. The cash fund in the Treasury has risen from $226,166,944 on April 1, 1898, to over $350,000,000 to-day. In a single year the annual interest charge has been reduced from $40,347,884 to $28,471,228, and yet Mr. Cleveland, in times of peace, but also of low tariff, had to borrow $262,000,000, and the bonds he sold bore 4 and 5 per cent interest. During the past year or two much of our debt has been refunded on a 2 per cent basis, and to-day Uncle Sam's credit is such that he could borrow a billion at 2 per cent.

But Uncle Sam is not borrowing in protection times. He is buying his own bonds, canceling his debt, and reducing his interest charges. He has $200,000,000 in the Treasury over and above the $150,000,000 gold reserve legally required. There is in circulation $2,246,300,542, or $28.72 per capita, against a circulation of $1,594,195,479 in 1895, and a per capita circulation of $21.44 in 1896. There is an estimated surplus of $80,000,000 for the fiscal year 1902 in spite of a large reduction in taxation.

And what of the people of the United States? The Secretary notes that they have a credit in the national banks of over $3,000,000,000, and in the savings banks there are deposits of nearly $3,000,000,000 more. Remarkable figures these. Do you want any greater proof that low tariff is a debt maker and protection a debt payer?

ASTOUNDING STATISTICS.

American financial and commercial statistics are to-day the wonder of the world. Our wealth of $100,000,000,000, or $1,250 per capita; our net debt of less than $1,000,000,000, or only $12.50 per capita; our savings bank and loan association deposits of $3,000,000,000; our national bank deposits of $3,000,000,000 more; our life insurance of $13,000,000,000; our annual fire insurance risks of $20,000,000,000; our bank clearings of $100,000,000,000; our manufactures of $15,000,000,000; our agricultural returns of $8,000,000,000; our favorable balance of trade of $600,000,000; our Government receipts of $700,000,000 and expenditures of $600,000,000; our Treasury fund of $350,000,000; our more than $2,000,000,000 of money in circulation; our $150,000,000 (coining value) product of gold and silver; our $1,500,000,000 railroad earnings, and, greatest of all, our actual turnover in commerce, trade, transportation, and general business of more than $30,000,000,000—these are figures to astonish the world.

We are the only nation of importance paying off our debt. We could sell $1,000,000,000 of bonds at 2 per cent in twenty-four hours. Money is accumulating in our National Treasury faster than we can use it. We are paying $140,000,000 a year in pensions. Since 1860 we have disbursed nearly $3,000,000,000 in this way; have paid off nearly $2,000,000,000 of debt, besides paying $2,750,000,000 of interest.

These are remarkable figures for one of the youngest nations of the earth. What they will be in another century or even in another generation can not even be estimated. With a rehabilitated American merchant marine, an isthmian canal, continued protection, peace, and prosperity the future must hold even more wonderful results for the United States than any that have transpired.

HOW WE COMPARE WITH THE REST OF THE WORLD.

Our progress under the Dingley tariff has been such that we no longer compare the United States with other nations, but with all the rest of the world combined. With less than 5 per cent of the population and only 7 per cent of the area, we are, nevertheless, about equal industrially to half the remainder of mankind.

We equal or surpass all the rest of the world in corn, cotton, eggs, petroleum, leather products, copper, and forest products.

Of the following we produce two-thirds as much as the rest of the world: Coal, pig iron, steel, and three-fifths of the total food and agricultural products and manufactures.

We produce one-half as much as the rest of the world in silver, iron ore, fish; one-third as much in gold, wheat, oats, hay, butter, and cheese; one-fourth as much in hops and beer; one-fifth to one-tenth as much in barley and wool.

We consume, reckoned in value, twice as much corn as all the rest of the world combined, one-fifth as much wheat, one-third as much oats, one-third as much cotton, one-fifth as much wool, one-third as much sugar, one-half as much fish, nearly as much coffee, one-fourth as much tea, about three-fifths as much meat—all food and agricultural products.

We have one-third as much wealth as all the rest of the world, one-third as much gold, one-fifth as much silver, one-tenth as many sheep, one-third as many cows, as much forest area, two-thirds the railroad mileage, or, counting total track, about as much as all the rest of the world combined. We have twice as much life insurance in force, one-half as much savings-bank deposits, we spend two-thirds as much for education, we have one-fourth the spindles in operation, nearly one-fourth as much shipping, one-fourth as many exports, about one-tenth as much revenue and expenditures, and less than one-thirtieth as much debt.

Taking everything into consideration we produce and consume about half as much as the rest of the world combined. Remember, the comparison is not with the world, but with all the rest of the world besides ourselves.

There is not a much better index to a country's condition than the freight carried. According to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], who should be an unquestioned authority on railroad business, the freight carried on the railroads of the United States equals the freight carried on all the other railroads of the earth and by all the ocean shipping. To this should be added our immense lake and coast trade.

Ex-Speaker Reed estimated that the people of the United States, when our population was about 70,000,000, were equal as consumers—as a market for our own and the world's production—compared with the rest of the world, to 700,000,000. The same comparison seems to hold good to-day, and our 77,000,000 people are equal to 770,000,000, or one-half the rest of the world. That is, every man, woman, and child in the United States is equal to ten persons outside of the United States, particularly as consumers of our own and the world's products of agriculture, mining, and manufacture.

As regards power of production, Mulhall has shown that a farm hand in the United States does as much as two in the United Kingdom, three in Germany, five in Austria, and seven in Russia. The farm laborers of Europe do nine times the work to get double the result of the farm laborers in the United States. That is, it takes four and one-half Europeans to equal one American. Extend the comparison to Asia and Africa and we find that the average United States producer is equal to ten the world over, outside of our own country. This comparison is emphasized by our coal consumption and steam power, and finally by our products of manufacture.

We are to-day practically independent of the rest of the earth. In a few years we shall raise our own sugar and fibers, manufacture our own silk, and, in fact, we shall produce almost everything used by mankind.

The conclusion, then, is warranted that in another generation, if the present system of protection is continued, the people of the United States and Territories will equal or surpass in production, consumption, and wealth the peoples of the rest of the world combined.

THE FOREIGN AND HOME MARKET.

I quote the following from the American Economist showing the relative value of the foreign and home market:

Do the people who spend so much brain power in seeking means for the enlargement of our foreign trade ever stop to think what a prodigiously big thing they lose sight of when in search of an infinitely smaller thing? Do they realize that while our foreign trade in manufactured articles of domestic production was $433,851,756 in 1900, the total volume of our internal trade for that year was over $30,000,000,000? It was estimated three years ago that our commodities carried from one part of the country to another for sale at home were worth about $28,000,000,000 a year, which was thirteen times the value of our entire foreign trade, and that the citizens of this country buy $40 worth of home products for every dollar they expend for foreign commodities. The foreign trade of the United States, therefore, is of small importance in comparison with its home commerce.

According to the statistics of the Twelfth Census, the gross value of our manufactured products, which amounted in 1900 to over $13,000,000,000, fairly represented the volume of our internal trade in manufactured articles, exclusive of the retailing of the products of the manufacturers, which represents transactions involving an amount at least as great, and consists of the reselling of these products as they pass into the possession of the ultimate consumer. The total money volume of the wholesale and retail transactions in the manufactured products of the United States is unquestionably greater than the volume of international trade of all the principal countries of the world, which equals the sum of $20,005,884,354, exports and imports added together. This does not include our immense home trade in raw materials that are not manufactured. It is likely that the volume of our total internal trade in 1900 was over $30,000,000,000.

The value of our internal commerce in proportion to population is greater than that of any other country, because Americans spend more for food, clothing, rent, and many comforts of life than any other people. At the end of the last century the wealth of the United States, estimated at $94,000,000,000, was equal to the combined wealth of Russia, Italy, and Spain, was double that of Germany, and nearly double that of France and a fourth larger than that of the United Kingdom.

The point of the whole matter is the comparison between the value of our own trade in our own great market, and the value of our trade with all the rest of the world, viz: Total internal trade for the year 1900, $30,000,000,000; total foreign trade for the year 1900, $2,201,282,823—more than 14 to 1. Is it not about time that the domestic producer left off worrying about the $1, which he already has, and can always keep—that is to say, the foreign trade that can not grow less, for we have that to sell which the world must have and will continue to buy—and devote his attention more assiduously to the $14, which, as experience shows, may easily grow less as the result of economic blundering, but must inevitably increase if we keep to the safe line of looking after the great home market. In short, can we afford to risk the certainty of a trade worth $30,000,000,000 in the doubtful scramble for a trade worth less than one-fourteenth of that amount? The study should be how not to decrease the purchasing power of a population that every year consumes $30,000,000,000 of domestic products.

Our sales to the world outside of ourselves amount to, say, $1,500,000,000; our sales at home amount to $30,000,000,000. That is the relative value to us of the world's markets and our home market. There are freights, commissions, and profits to be considered in foreign sales, while in home sales all transactions add to the income of the people.

EDUCATION.

Mr. President, there have been more scholars in our public and private schools and colleges the past year than ever before in our history. I mean not only in the aggregate, but relatively to population. There was hardly a city in the country whose school facilities were adequate last fall to accommodate the scholars who sought admission. Many of our private schools have been compelled to turn away applicants, and the entering classes of our colleges showed record-breaking registry.

This was not the condition in 1895–96. What has brought about the change? In the first place, it is not necessary for so many children to work in the mill. In the second place, the prosperous man need not keep the children from school for lack of clothes and shoes. Again, it costs money to go through college and technical schools. This all brings up the question of so-called child labor. "Is it not on the increase?" my free-trade friend will ask. I answer that the census report shows an increase in some sections of the South and West, but large decreases in other sections. The very increased demand for child labor when our adults are fully employed is in itself an indication of increased prosperity. While child labor should undoubtedly be regulated by law, it is nevertheless a blessing when the father is dead or disabled that the boys and girls can get good wages and contribute to the support of the family.

But the conditions are so immeasurably improved over the years of the Wilson-Gorman tariff that I can not refrain from calling your attention to the fact. We have the best system of public schools in the world. We have the best paid teachers, the most comfortable structures, and an army of scholars who are reaping benefits far greater than ever before in our history and far greater than can be found in any other country, and as I have already shown we are expending for education 40 per cent as much as all the other countries of the world combined.

THE AGE OF LUXURY.

In a recent number of Leslie's Weekly Francis Curtis has an article under the caption "The Age of Luxury." The term is most fit and the picture so true that I want to quote from the article as follows:

We have had our iron age and our age of steel. Cotton has been king. Corn and wheat have both sat on the throne. Time was when there was "nothing like leather," and even the American hog has ruled abroad as well as at home. Electricity has worn the crown, and one after another of our productions has for a time held sway, giving place to some industrial rival, till, instead of any one being supreme, we are foremost with many.

So at this beginning of a new century we live in an age as foreign to that of our fathers as steam and electricity compare with sail and candle. Well may we call it the age of luxury.

It would be difficult indeed to define luxury as found in the United States, or to draw the line between luxury and necessity. Many of the things which we have become accustomed to class among the necessaries of life are thought of abroad as luxuries or are not enjoyed at all. We might (but think we can not) do without a thousand and one comforts and conveniences which our fathers would have considered extravagant and unnecessary. In our homes, at our offices, on our travels, at every turn of life, we enjoy luxuries innumerable.

Instead of the old-time one weekly paper, we now have our morning and evening daily, our illustrated, religious, and other weeklies, and one or more monthly magazines. We have our luxuries in food and our luxuries in dress. Even the dolls of our children are better dressed and have more "things" than did our grandparents themselves when children. Our homes are filled with luxurious furniture and bric-a-brac, our tables are set with costly china and glassware, and our rooms are hung with the rarest pictures and curtains. Our offices are equipped with easy chairs and rugs, with open bookcases and desks, with telephone and mail-chutes. Our railroad, parlor, sleeping, and dining cars are luxurious in every detail, and our hotels are palaces from entrance to roof.

Milady's gowns and wraps and lingerie and gloves and handkerchiefs are fit for any queen, and every daughter is a princess in wealth of apparel and comforts. In amusement there is no limit to luxury. Millions and hundreds of millions are annually spent at the theater, on yachting, golf, football, receptions, dinners, teas, and balls. We have our pianos, our phonographs, our automobiles, our bicycles, and our carriages for adult, baby, and doll. We have our sealskins and furs, our silks and satins and fine linen, our feathers and boas, our velvets and laces, our paintings and roses, our hand-painted ware and ornaments, our diamonds and rubies and pearls, our watches and clocks, our sweets and perfumes, and so on ad infinitum.

We spend over a billion a year in drink, outside of tea and coffee; we spend over half a billion in tobacco and a quarter of a billion in confectionery, fruit, and flowers. It is estimated that our present annual bill for luxuries exceeds $10,000,000,000. And only half a century ago our fathers would have been amazed at even the thought of such expenditures and would have termed it folly.

And yet the making and production of these luxuries form the basis of much of our prosperity, and in turn it is our prosperity that enables us to enjoy such comfort and luxury. We would hardly want to go back to the days of Jefferson and Hamilton and Franklin, or even to the days of Lincoln and Seward. So here is to the age of luxury, and may it be but a beginning of a still higher plane of moral living and a still greater enjoyment of the noblest things of life.

LOOKING SOUTHWARD.

If there still remains any section of our common country whose people cling to the traditions of the past and decline to recognize the fact and the logic of the present, let us hope that they will turn their faces to the great light of to-day, the light of splendid progress and prosperity. They should forget and remember—forget that they were for a brief period alienated from sympathy and good will toward neighbors and friends, and remember that all past differences have been wiped off the record and that they now stand with all the people upon the exalted ground of mutual patriotism.

They may well forget that they have been free traders for nearly three-quarters of a century, and remember that their great apostle in economic doctrine abandoned protection only because he believed that the control of the world's supply of a great agricultural staple placed the producers of that staple in the enviable position of being able to sell in the dearest and buy in the cheapest of markets with advantage and profit. He did not foresee the tremendous possibilities connected with an industrial development that under protection was to convert this raw product into finished material at home, saving ocean transportation charges across and back, and involving the investment of home capital, the employment of home labor, and the payment of home wages. He could not foresee the tremendous unearthing of buried treasure in the iron mines that under the Dingley tariff was to follow the establishment of a gigantic producing industry upon the firm and enduring basis that only protection could provide.

None of these tremendous possibilities, now accomplished facts, were present in the mind of Calhoun when he shifted from protection to free trade, otherwise he would not have shifted. So I say to our friends and neighbors to the southward, "Forget that you were free traders, and try to remember what protection has done, is doing, and stands to do for you." Signs are not wanting that they are forgetting and that they are remembering. A little time may be needed to complete the process of reversion, but I am thankful to believe that they are on the right track and not long hence will plant their feet alongside of ours on the solid rock of protection to American labor and industry.

CONCLUSION.

Mr. President, I have presented briefly many of the material benefits which we as a nation and as a people have derived from the operation of the Dingley tariff. But I have by no means told the whole story. We can estimate the production and consumption of the necessaries and luxuries of life, but the comforts and contentment and happiness of the American home is inestimable. How can we calculate the joy of the farmer or mechanic in being able to give his sons a college education? How can we calculate the pleasure of taking home the latest book; of taking the wife or sweetheart to the play or concert; of buying the piano for the daughter; of filling the vase with flowers; of taking home the candy and toys for the little ones? Why, it is Christmas the year round in millions of American homes. The birthdays are joyful days. The summer trips to the mountains and seashore and country in vacation time are not to be measured by dollars and cents in the happiness and health they give to millions of wives and children.

No, Mr. President, there is no computing the blessings and benefits of protection. We can not measure happiness by the yard or pound or quart or dollar's worth, but we can produce it and enhance it and continue it by continuing protection and prosperity. I met an old farmer recently, a sterling old man who voted for Franklin Pierce and has voted for every Democratic candidate for President and Congress since. I asked him, "Well, how is the farm?" Without answering, he said, "Senator, I want to tell you something. I am going to vote the Republican ticket next fall and in 1904 and as long as I live." "Why, how is that?" I asked. He replied: "Simply because I am tired of voting against prosperity."

There is the whole thing in a nut shell. Not only the truck farmer of New England, but the wheat grower of Minnesota, the corn grower of Kansas, the sugar grower of Louisiana, the cotton planter of Georgia, back to the wool grower of Ohio and the tobacco planter of Virginia and Connecticut, way to the fruit grower of California—the capitalist, the millworker, the railroad hand, the merchant and clerk, the professional man—every one, from the most elevated position to the humblest—must vote for or against prosperity.

And right here let me quote again from Mr. Cowles's address:

A wise wag once said in response to the toast, "Here's to your prosperity. May you stand it like a man." "That's a better sentiment than you think it is," said he. "It takes a clever man to stand prosperity. Any fool can stand adversity; he has to."

Our friends on the other side are looking for an issue. They need not worry, the issue is looking for them. Prosperity is the issue, and all other questions are secondary. The American standard of living, American manhood and American homes are but the resultants of Republican legislation, the sequences of a protective tariff which brought to us and will continue to give us an unprecedented age of luxury, an unparalleled era of prosperity.

REDEMPTION OF CERTAIN INTERNAL-REVENUE STAMPS.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6570) to amend the act of May 12, 1900, authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to redeem or make allowance for internal-revenue stamps, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out said Senate amendments and all of said bill (H. R. 6570) after line 6, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Excepting documentary and proprietary stamps issued under the act of June 13, 1898, which stamps may be redeemed as hereinbefore authorized, upon presentation prior to the 1st day of July, 1904" so that said proviso shall read as follows: "Provided further, That no claim for the redemption of or allowance for stamps shall be allowed unless presented within two years after the purchase of said stamps from the Government, excepting documentary and proprietary stamps issued under the act of June 13, 1898, which stamps may be redeemed as hereinbefore authorized, upon presentation prior to the 1st day of July, 1904."

NELSON W. ALDRICH,
O. H. PLATT,
H. M. TELLER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
SERENO E. PAYNE,
JOHN DALZELL,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The bill (S. 1347) for the proper labeling of wine purporting to be champagne was announced as the first bill on the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

The bill (S. 3342) for preventing the adulteration, misbranding, and imitations of foods, beverages, candies, drugs, and condiments in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and for regulating interstate traffic therein, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over. These bills, when objection is made, will remain on the Calendar, retaining their place, the Chair understands.

PERSONAL TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 4861) to regulate the assessment and collection of personal taxes in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that go over.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is not that the bill which has been incorporated in the District of Columbia appropriation bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Why ought it not to go off the Calendar?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not see any reason why it should not, although I dislike to make that suggestion.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The chairman of the committee is not here. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is here.

Mr. GALLINGER. That bill might go from the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be indefinitely postponed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12056) granting an increase of pension to Warren C. Plummer.

Mr. ALDRICH. We are proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is there any objection to this bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; but we are taking up the bills in their order on the Calendar.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to call up this bill to-day if there is no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is very likely that it will be reached on the Calendar.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is pretty well along.

ACCOUNTS OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 2341) to authorize the readjustment of the accounts of Army officers in certain cases, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let it be read again.

The Secretary again read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Committee on Claims have been agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is the report a long one?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is pretty long.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will not ask to have it read if it is long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3310) to amend section 1754 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the preference in civil appointments of ex Army and Navy officers was next in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] desired to be present when the bill was considered.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let it go over.

Mr. KEAN. What is the bill?

The bill was again read by title.

Mr. KEAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask leave to have a bill considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unanimous agreement this morning was that the Calendar of unobjected cases should be proceeded with the entire remainder of the day.

The bill (S. 362) to revive and amend an act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in the insurrectionary districts within the United States, and acts amendatory thereof, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and it will go over.

PUBLIC LANDS AND BUILDINGS IN PORTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the bill (H. R. 14244) authorizing the President to reserve public lands and buildings in the island of Porto Rico for public uses, and granting other public lands and buildings to the government of Porto Rico, be reprinted as it passed the Senate yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

PATENT SPECIFICATIONS AND DRAWINGS.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 103) relative to the disposition of patent specifications and drawings in the western district of Pennsylvania was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4782) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to try, adjudicate, and determine the claim of Clayton G. Landis, administrator of David B. Landis, deceased, was next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It goes over without prejudice.

The bill (S. 2869) for the relief of Abram G. Hoyt was next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3280) for the relief of Curry County, State of Oregon, was next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over without prejudice.

The bill (S. 4832) for the relief of Col. H. B. Freeman was annnounced as next in order.

Mr. SCOTT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

The bill (S. 4363) granting the Central Arizona Railway Company a right of way for railroad purposes through the San Francisco Mountains Forest Reserve was next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill goes over. It was vetoed by the President.

The joint resolution (S. R. 211) relative to calling of Maj. Cornelius Gardener as a witness as to conditions in the Philippine Islands was next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the joint resolution goes over.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAXES.

The bill (S. 4986) to amend an act entitled "An act to receive arrearages of taxes due District of Columbia to July 1, 1900, at 6 per cent per annum, in lieu of penalties and costs," approved February 15, 1902, was next in order, and was read.

Mr. SCOTT. Let that go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that this is a District of Columbia bill. The District Committee has no day. It will take but a moment to pass the bill. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. SCOTT. It is a Senate bill and surely will not get through the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. It may.

Mr. SCOTT. I withdraw my objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The amendments of the committee were, in line 4, after the word "words," to insert "and;" in the same line, after the word "water-main," to insert "taxes;" in same line, to strike out "special improvement" and insert "special;" and in line 5, after the word "assessments," to insert "levied prior to July 1, 1899;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That after the word "ninety-nine," in fifth line, be inserted the words "and water-main taxes and special assessments levied prior to July 1, 1899."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUE OF COMMODORE SLOAT.

The bill (S. 4657) for the erection of a statue of Commodore John D. Sloat in the city of Monterey, Cal., was next in order, and was read.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to have my memory in regard to history refreshed on that case. I ask that the report may be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on the Library, May 8, 1902.

Mr. SCOTT. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

STOREKEEPER-GAUGER.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask leave to submit a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the report will be received.

Mr. SPOONER. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12097) to amend the internal-revenue laws in regard to storekeepers and gaugers, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask that it be considered at this time. It is a very short bill, it is recommended earnestly by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and it is important.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the internal-revenue officer holding the combined office of storekeeper and gauger shall hereafter be known and denominated as a storekeeper-gauger, and when performing the combined duties of storekeeper-gauger or when assigned by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to perform the duties of a storekeeper only at any distillery or at any general or special bonded warehouse, he shall receive for his services the compensation of storekeeper only, but when assigned by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to perform the duties of gauger only, under the internal-revenue laws, as provided by those laws, he shall receive only the compensation for his services and the traveling expenses which are allowed by law to United State gaugers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry regarding this bill. Would not its consideration be an infringement of the unanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asked unanimous consent to make a report and to have it considered.

Mr. SPOONER. If it takes any time, I will not press it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3594) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations" was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 1969) to conserve the flood waters of Lake Tahoe, in the States of California and Nevada, and to regulate the overflow thereof, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It goes over without prejudice.

The bill (H. R. 159) providing for free homesteads on the public lands for actual and bona fide settlers in the north one-half of the Colville Indian Reservation, State of Washington, and reserving the public lands for that purpose, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over without prejudice.

POTOMAC RIVER FISHING.

The bill (S. 5299) to amend sections 897 and 903 of subchapter 7 of chapter 19 of an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia" was read as next in order.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to have some explanation of what this bill means.

Mr. McCOMAS. I think the Chair will recognize that there are some very bad names for bass in the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The bill reads:

That no person shall catch or kill in the waters of the Potomac River or its tributaries within the District of Columbia any black bass (otherwise known as green bass and chub), crappie (otherwise known as calico bass and strawberry bass), between the 1st day of April and the 29th of May of each year——

That I understand—

nor have in possession or expose for sale any of said species of fish at any other time during the year except by angling——

Mr. ALDRICH. They are not to be caught in a seine.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not in nets.

Mr. McCOMAS. I think the Chair could enlighten us better than anyone.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut (reading)— nor catch nor kill any of the aforesaid species by what are known as out lines or trot lines, having a succession of hooks or devices.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the bill had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island thinks that the bill had better go over, and the Chair concurs with him.

Mr. McCOMAS. Izaak Walton could not, two hundred years ago, have parsed that English.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

JOHN HORNICK.

The bill (H. R. 8108) for the relief of John Hornick was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It recites that John Hornick served in the infantry service of the United States for nearly three years during the war of the rebellion, and was honorably discharged from such service, and proposes to relieve him from any disability now or heretofore existing, since the date of his discharge, by reason of any defective naturalization, or by reason of not having been duly naturalized under the laws of the United States. It also authorizes him to prosecute, in the Court of Claims of the United States, Indian depredation claim numbered in that court 10389.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSIGNEE OF JOHN GAFFORD.

The bill (S. 1156) for the relief of John C. Ray, assignee of John Gafford, of Arkansas, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that bill go over.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator will not object to that bill. It is a claim which accrued before the war commenced, and has been due for all these years. There is no reason in the world why the bill should not pass.

Mr. ALDRICH. Most of these claims are very doubtful; but if the Senator knows anything about this particular claim I shall be glad to have him state it.

Mr. BERRY. I know all about it. There is no doubt about this claim, and the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads unanimously reported it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the report be read, and then we can understand what the claim is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. PENROSE May 15, 1902, as follows:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1156) for the relief of John C. Ray, assignee of John Gafford, of Arkansas, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to make the following report and recommend the passage of the bill:

The facts in this case are fully set forth in the following letters from the Postmaster-General, under date of April 22, 1902, and from the Acting Auditor for the Post-Office Department, under date of April 23, 1902:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 22, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th instant, with inclosures, asking for an expression of opinion of this Department in regard to Senate bill 1156 for the relief of John C. Ray, assignee of John Gafford, of Arkansas, and, in reply, to state that the records of this Department show that there was a contract with John Gafford for carrying the mail on route No. 7956, from Hot Springs to Paris, Tex., 183 miles, one round trip a week, compensation $1,399 per annum, for the term from July 1, 1858, to June 30, 1862, and that under date of May 31, 1861, an order was issued by the Postmaster-General suspending service on said route from May 31, 1861.

As the information in regard to the settlements with the contractor for service performed under the contract could only be had from the records of the office of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, I have referred your letter and inclosures to that officer with the request that he advise you in regard thereto.

Very respectfully,

H. C. PAYNE,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,
United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 23, 1902.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 18th instant, received by reference from the Postmaster-General, relative to Senate bill No. 1156, for the relief of John C. Ray, assignee of John Gafford, mail contractor in Arkansas during 1860 and 1861, I have the honor to inform you that the records of this office show that John Gafford had the contract for carrying the mail on route 7956, from Hot Springs, Ark., to Paris, Tex., from July 1, 1858, to June 30, 1862, and that there stands to his credit the sum of $853.25 for service from October 1, 1860, to May 31, 1861, on which date all mail service in the Southern States was discontinued. This balance was reported to the Secretary of the Treasury, for appropriation by Congress, on February 3, 1883, but no provision has been made for its payment.

The papers in the case are herewith returned. Many of this class of claims were paid by the Confederate States Government, but the Confederate records (mutilated), now in the custody of this office, do not show, so far as they go, that any payment was made to Mr. Gafford under his contract with the United States.

Respectfully,

H. ALLEN,
Acting Auditor.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas how this case differs from a great number of cases which must have been similarly situated, where the contractors for carrying the mail had earned something under their contracts, and their contracts were suspended at the time of the beginning of the war; in other words, is this a separate, individual, and exceptional case, or is it one of a great number of cases?

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I am not a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and was not present when the bill was considered. If there is any difference between this and a large number of other claims or some other claims of this character, I do not know what it is; but I know there are a number of claims for compensation where the services were rendered before the war began and where there is no evidence that anything was ever paid on them by the Confederate Government, and which claims ought to have been paid long ago. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that since I have been here we have tried for years to get a general bill passed to pay claims of this character, but have not been able to do so. The Government owes the money for services rendered before the war and in no way connected with the war. I can not see any reason on earth why the Government should not make payment.

The bill was passed.

JAMES F. M'INDOE.

The bill (S. 5531) for the relief of James F. McIndoe was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was passed on the 23d instant, and a motion was made to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider was made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. SPOONER. What is it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill for the relief of James F. McIndoe.

Mr. ALDRICH. I object to it, anyhow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. SPOONER. I have looked into that bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have objected to it.

Mr. SPOONER. But the bill passed, and I simply entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not in order now.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask leave to withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. I object to present consideration.

Mr. SPOONER. The bill has been considered and passed. The Senator does not object to my withdrawing the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

UNIVERSITY OF MONTANA.

The bill (S. 3953) granting additional lands adjacent to the site of the University of Montana was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCOTT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF GEORGE W. CURTIS.

The bill (S. 2342) for the relief of the executrix of the estate of George W. Curtis, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the words "pay to the," to strike out "executrix of the estate" and insert "legal representatives;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representatives of George W. Curtis, late of Arizona Territory, deceased, for the benefit of said estate, $2,288.91, the amount due said Curtis for services rendered the United States in carrying out, as bondsman, the Army transportation contract of Isaac S. Randol, defaulting contractor, in contract No. 61220, for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1882.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of George W. Curtis, deceased."

HENRY BASH.

The bill (S. 1468) for the relief of Henry Bash was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Henry Bash $1,260, that being the amount due him for office rent and expenses incurred by him while United States shipping commissioner at Port Townsend, Wash., from July 1, 1886, to October 1, 1891, being sixty-three months, at $20 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUSTIS PARKE UPSHUR.

The bill (S. 1668) for the relief of Custis Parke Upshur was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Custis Parke Upshur $787.82, that being the amount due him for office rent and expenses incurred by him while United States shipping commissioner at Astoria, Oreg., from July 1, 1886, to October 1, 1891, being for five years and three months, at $12.50 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator from New Hampshire will waive the reading of the report, I think I can explain the case to his satisfaction.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall be very glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. Custis Parke Upshur, the claimant in this case, was appointed a shipping commissioner at Astoria, Oreg., on the 1st day of July, 1884, under the provisions of the act of Congress of June 26, 1884, entitled, "An act to remove certain burdens of the American merchant marine and encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and for other purposes." He took the oath of office and entered upon the discharge of his duties as shipping commissioner on July 1, 1884, and continued in the office and discharged the duties thereof to and including January 5, 1895, at a compensation fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury. After the passage of the act of June 19, 1886, Mr. Upshur was paid for his services as shipping commissioner, but was not paid the office rent and incidental expenses incurred by him. He necessarily incurred expenses for office rent from July 1, 1886, to January 5, 1895.

He finally brought suit in the Court of Claims for the amount of $1,277.08. The case was heard by that court, and the court found in his favor for the sum of $489.16, but also found that there was a balance due him of $787.82, which was barred by the statute of limitations. The amount for which the court rendered judgment was paid, and this is for the balance.

The question as to the liability of the Government of the United States in such cases was decided by the Supreme Court in Reed v. The United States (167 U. S., 671). It is on all fours with a bill which was passed a few moments ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw my request for the reading of the report.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE OF WILLIAM KENDALL.

The bill (S. 2924) for the relief of the legal representative of Maj. William Kendall was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported by the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in section 2, on page 2, line 4, after the word "exceed," to strike out "exclusive of interest;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That in all cases where the several amounts claimed were regularly entered on the original muster of descriptive rolls which accompanied the detachments from said fort, and were thus charged against the respective soldiers but were not transferred to the company rolls nor retained out of the soldier's pay and allowed to said William Kendall, deceased, the said amounts, not to exceed $2,000, shall be allowed and paid to the legal representative of said William Kendall, deceased, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Why are those words "exclusive of interest" proposed to be stricken out? I do not know that I understand the full meaning of that amendment. If the operation of it is to allow interest, those words certainly ought to remain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], who reported the bill, does not seem to be present.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill go over until he is present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over without prejudice.

PROTECTION OF FISH AND GAME IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The bill (S. 2865) for the protection of fish and game in the Indian Territory was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], who reported the bill, is not present, and so I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. QUARLES. I hope my good friend will not object to that bill. I stand sponsor for it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. QUARLES. I wish to say that the entire committee have considered the bill and they regard it as a very necessary one.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That it shall be unlawful in the Indian Territory for any person or persons to take, wound, or kill, in any manner whatsoever, any wild buck, deer, or fawn, except during the months of November, December, and January of each year; and it shall be unlawful at any time to chase the same with dog or dogs.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful in the Indian Territory for any person or persons to take, wound, or kill, in any manner whatsoever, any wild turkey, except during the months of November, December, January, and February of each year.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful in the Indian Territory for any person or persons to take, wound, or kill, in any manner whatsoever, any prairie chicken or grouse, except during the months of September and October in each year.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful in the Indian Territory for any person or persons to take, wound, or kill, in any manner whatsoever, or have in possession, any quail, except from November 15 to February 15 in each year.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person or corporation to ship or convey from the Indian Territory beyond its limits any fish or game whatsoever. It shall be unlawful for any railroad or express company or other common carrier to carry or transport out of said Territory any fish or game whatsoever: Provided, however, That this act shall not be held or construed to have repealed any provision of chapter 533, Thirty-first Statutes at Large, page 187, or to abridge the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture thereby conferred.

SEC. 6. That no person, company, or corporation, or the agent thereof, shall at any time catch, kill, or have in possession any bird or game animal in the Indian Territory, the taking, killing, or wounding of which is prohibited, with intent to ship the same from the Indian Territory.

SEC. 7. That it shall be unlawful for any person at any time to net or trap in the Indian Territory any quail, prairie chicken, grouse, or wild turkey.

SEC. 8. That it shall be unlawful to take or catch any fish in any of the rivers, streams, lakes, or ponds in the Indian Territory with nets or seines, except to catch and take minnows for bait fish.

SEC. 9. That it shall be unlawful for any person, with intent to kill, maim, or paralyze any fish or other water animal, to cast, drop, or otherwise deposit in any river, creek, lake, or pond, or in any other stream or body of water within the Indian Territory, any explosive material or substance, or any intoxicating or stupefying liquid, drug, vegetable, or fruit, or to take from any river, creek, lake, pond, or other body of water within the Indian Territory any fish or water animal so stupefied, intoxicated, or killed.

SEC. 10. That the United States courts and the United States commissioners' courts in the Indian Territory, within their respective territorial jurisdictions, are hereby given concurrent jurisdiction to enforce the provisions of this act and to try and punish violators of the same.

SEC. 11. That any person or corporation violating any or either of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined for each offense in any sum not less than $25 nor more than $500, in the discretion of the court trying the cause, and may be committed until such fine and costs shall be paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14046) making appropriation for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, insists upon its amendments numbered 1, 7, 9, 13, 24, 25, 26, 37, 38, 39, 40, 43, 46, 47, 52, 56, 57, 58, 61, 64, 76, 77, 88, 89, 91, 92, and 93, upon which the committee of conference have been unable to agree, agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FOSS, Mr. DAYTON, and Mr. MEYER of Louisiana managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5269) to provide a commission to secure plans and designs for a monument or memorial to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States.

MONUMENT TO ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. There is a conference report on the table in relation to the Abraham Lincoln monument, which I desire to have placed before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a House conference which is on the table.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Then I submit the Senate report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5269) to provide a commission to secure plans and designs for a monument or memorial to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert before the House amendment the name "Senator GEORGE G. VEST," so that the amendment will read "Senator GEORGE G. VEST and Representative JAMES D. RICHARDSON;" and the House agree to the same.

GEO. PEABODY WETMORE,
H. C. HANSBROUGH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. T. MCCLEARY,
S. W. MCCALL,
DUDLEY G. WOOTEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

CUSTOMS INSPECTORS AT NEW YORK.

The bill (S. 215) regulating the duties and fixing the compensation of the customs inspectors at the port of New York was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment in line 8, after the word "them," to strike out "beyond eight hours per day" and insert "at unusual hours;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to increase the compensation of inspectors of customs at the port of New York as he may think advisable and proper, by adding to their present compensation a sum not exceeding $1 per day, which additional compensation shall be for work now performed by them at unusual hours, for which no compensation is now allowed, and shall include work performed by said inspectors at night in examining passengers' baggage, and also as reimbursement for expenses incurred by them for meals and transportation while in the discharge or performance of their official duties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LABELING OF WINES.

Mr. MASON. I was absent from the Chamber when Order of Business 876, being the bill (S. 1347) for the proper labeling of wine purporting to be champagne, which was reported by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] on the 27th of March, was reached. I should like to have that bill considered, and, if there be no objection to it, I should like to have it passed now.

Mr. ALDRICH. There was objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection was made to it, but it went over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. MASON. I ask unanimous consent for its consideration. It is a very short bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unanimous consent given was that the Senate would consider unobjected cases on the Calendar. The bill referred to by the Senator was objected to when it was reached.

DISTRICT OF ALASKA.

The bill (S. 4068) to redivide the district of Alaska into three recording and judicial divisions was announced as next in order.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Retaining its place?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over and retain its place on the Calendar.

ASSAY OFFICE AT TACOMA, WASH.

The bill (S. 5928) to establish an assay office at Tacoma, Wash., was announced as next in order.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over without prejudice.

COMPROMISE OF LITIGATION IN NORTH CAROLINA.

The bill (S. 5229) to authorize, settle, and compromise certain litigation pending in the circuit court for the western district of North Carolina was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

DEFINITION OF "CONSPIRACY," ETC.

The bill (H. R. 11060) to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let that go over. I object to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

Mr. KEAN. It may as well go to the other Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill does not retain its place, but goes to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. MASON. What is the bill that goes over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. House bill 11060, to be found at the bottom of page 8 of the Calendar.

Mr. MASON. The bill to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the bill.

Mr. MASON. Was there objection to the consideration of that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was.

ASHLEY RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 5679) to authorize the construction of two bridges across the Ashley River in the counties of Charleston and Dorchester, S. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCLAURIN of South Carolina. There is a bill of the same character which has passed the House of Representatives, and I should like to have that considered instead of the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the House bill on the Calendar?

Mr. BERRY. The House bill is on the Calendar.

Mr. MCLAURIN of South Carolina. It is on the Calendar, and is order of business No. 2085. I ask that that may be considered instead of the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14247) to authorize the Charleston, Suburban and Summerville Railway Company to construct and maintain two bridges across Ashley River, in the State of South Carolina.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 5679, on the same subject, will be indefinitely postponed, in the absence of objection. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (S. 4202) to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. MASON. Let the bill go over.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was objection made?

Mr. ALDRICH. It was.

Mr. MASON. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

AQUEDUCT BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 5964) to provide for rebuilding the Aqueduct Bridge, District of Columbia, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be indefinitely postponed. The matter is taken care of in the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be indefinitely postponed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN MARYLAND.

The bill (S. 3248) to establish a fish hatchery and fish station in the State of Maryland was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Maryland, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point to be selected by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISTHMIAN CANAL.

The bill (S. 5676) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. KEAN. The bill had better be indefinitely postponed, I should think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposes so.

Mr. KEAN. I suggest that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTOR RICHMOND P. HOBSON.

The bill (S. 3983) authorizing the transfer to the retired list of the Navy of Naval Constructor Richmond P. Hobson, United States Navy, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BERRY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. But before that is done, I hope the Senator from New Jersey will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BERRY. Let us pass a few more bills.

Mr. PETTUS. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will not insist upon his motion.

Mr. KEAN. I withdraw the motion for the present.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6232) for the relief of I. I. Barber. It will take but a moment. It was reported favorably this morning. It is not on the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask the Senator from Mississippi, if he will allow me, to wait just two minutes before he makes his request and let the Calendar be proceeded with to that extent.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. What is the object?

Mr. PETTUS. The object is to dispose of Calendar No. 1666.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. It will take but a minute to dispose of the bill in which I am interested, and then the other bill can be called up.

Mr. PETTUS. We have not yet got away from the Calendar.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. There was a motion made to go into executive session, and I asked that it be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The motion was withdrawn.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. It will take but a moment to pass the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the Calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I understood unanimous consent was given for the taking up of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not so understand it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the bill may be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has not yet been read. The request for unanimous consent has not been submitted to the Senate. The bill will be read subject to objection. But the unanimous-consent agreement was that the Senate should proceed with the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar. If anyone objects, the Calendar is in order.

Mr. PETTUS. All I ask is that we continue on the Calendar one moment longer.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. If I can get unanimous consent after that measure is disposed of, I will withdraw the request for the present.

Mr. TELLER. Let us go on with the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next case on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I hope the Senator from Illinois will withdraw the motion.

Mr. MASON. I understand the ruling of the Chair is that unanimous consent can not be had to take up any bill because it would interfere with the unanimous consent already given. I would gladly withhold the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, but under the ruling of the Chair, which I think is correct, unanimous consent can not be had until the previous agreement is exhausted.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I do not so understand the Chair to rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not so hold.

Mr. MASON. Then I misunderstood the ruling of the Chair. I understand now we are proceeding under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. MASON. Now unanimous consent is asked to dispense with the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not ask unanimous consent to dispense with anything.

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. If the Senator from Mississippi has unanimous consent, or can get it, I will not press the motion.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent. It will take but a moment to pass the bill. I want to get away tomorrow or the next day.

Mr. ALDRICH. We all do.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. There will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. MASON. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SCOTT. I understand that unanimous consent was given to proceed with the Calendar. We all have bills which we are just as anxious to get through as is my friend on the other side with respect to his bill, and if unanimous consent is given to call up special bills, I shall certainly expect the same courtesy to be extended to me.

Mr. PETTUS. I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion.

Mr. MASON. I withdraw it.

I. I. BARBER.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6232) for the relief of I. I. Barber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I feel obliged to object to the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I trust the Senator from Rhode Island will withdraw his objection. There is an amendment limiting it to the State of Mississippi. It is a perfectly harmless bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. With the amendment I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in line 10, after the word "lands," to strike out "in" and insert "of;" in line 11, to strike out "or in the Territories," and insert "in the State of Mississippi," and after the word "Interior," in line 14, to insert "duly certified and assigned to the bearer."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the bill be read as it will read if amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That I. I. Barber, who is the owner of military bounty land warrant 45467, issued the 20th day of March, 1852, for 40 acres of land, and military bounty land warrant 62104, issued the 13th day of April, 1857, for 160 acres of land, is authorized to select 200 acres of unreserved public lands of the United States in the State of Mississippi in one body, or in subdivisions of not less than 40 acres each, and upon such selection and the delivery of said land warrants to the Secretary of the Interior, duly certified and assigned to the bearer, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent, or patents, as the case may be, to said I. I. Barber for such land or lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURG. JOHN F. BRANSFORD, UNITED STATES NAVY.

The bill (S. 4083) for the relief of Surg. John F. Bransford, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to transfer Surg. John F. Bransford, of the retired list of the United States Navy, from the half-pay list to the 75 per cent pay list of retired officers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL CHERRY.

The bill (H. R. 621) for the relief of Daniel Cherry was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Solicitor of the Treasury to convey, in the name of the United States, to Daniel Cherry, of Henry County, Ala., all right, title, and interest that the United States has in or to the property formerly belonging to said Daniel Cherry in the town of Dothan, Ala.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN C. GOINGS AND OTHERS.

The bill (H. R. 2494) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, objection being made.

S. J. BAYARD SCHINDEL.

The bill (H. R. 8769) for the relief of S. J. Bayard Schindel was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to cause to be credited the accounts of Lieut. S. J. Bayard Schindel, commissary Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, with the sum of $77.13, being for subsistence funds stolen from the commissary storehouse by unknown parties.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEPHEN B. HALSEY.

The bill (H. R. 10279) to pay the claim of Stephen B. Halsey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $50, to be paid to Stephen B. Halsey, for the damage done to his dock at Astoria, Long Island, by the U. S. S. Canby on August 21, 1899.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HERBERT O. DUNN.

The bill (S. 1866) for the relief of Herbert O. Dunn was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. SCOTT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over without prejudice.

CLAIMS OF CERTAIN COUNTIES IN ARIZONA.

The joint resolution (S. R. 97) to authorize certain officers of the Treasury Department to audit, certify, and pay claims of certain counties of Arizona was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEAN. Is there a report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. FOSTER of Louisiana on the 31st of May, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, having had under consideration S. R. 97, to authorize certain officers of the Treasury Department to audit, certify, and pay claims of certain counties of Arizona, and having examined the same and the accompanying documents, beg leave to submit the following report:

The joint resolution (S. R. 97) authorizes the Auditor of the State and other Departments to examine all claims which may be presented in proper form under provisions of former acts of Congress, and, if found correct, to certify the same to the Speaker of the House for a deficiency appropriation.

The history of these accounts and the necessity for present legislation are set out in a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury of January 29, 1901, transmitting a report from the Auditor for the State Department of January 28, 1901, which is herein inserted and made a part of this report.

The Committee on Claims of the Fifty-sixth Congress, second session (House Report No. 2894), made a favorable report on a similar resolution, which is hereto attached and made part of this report.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the joint resolution with the following amendment:

Of the title as follows: Strike out the words "and pay" in line 2 of title and insert in line 1, after "audit," the word "and."

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 29, 1901.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 23d instant, inclosing S. R. 151, "Joint resolution authorizing proper officers of the Treasury Department to examine and certify claims in favor of certain counties in Arizona," and asking for a report thereon, I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of the report of the Auditor for State and other departments, dated the 28th instant, suggesting certain amendments to the resolution, for your information.

Respectfully,

L. J. GAGE, Secretary.

Hon. J. L. RAWLINS,
United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE STATE AND OTHER DEPARTMENTS,
Washington, January 28, 1901.

SIR: The communication of Hon. J. L. RAWLINS, United States Senator, dated 23d instant, inclosing joint resolution (S. R. 151) and requesting an examination of same, has attention, the matter having been referred to this office for report. Mr. RAWLINS requests that the Committee on Claims, United States Senate, be informed as to the propriety or the necessity of the passage of the resolution, together with such data or information that, in your opinion, may be relevant or appropriate to the proposed legislation. The intention of the resolution is to authorize the proper officers of the Treasury Department to examine and certify claims for expenses incurred in the prosecution of Indians, in favor of certain counties in Arizona, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives for a deficiency appropriation.

I have the honor to make the following report.

Upon investigation it is found that the proper accounting officers of this Department, under authority conferred upon them by joint resolution No. 42, approved August 6, 1894 (28 Stats., 589), have examined and settled the accounts of Mohave, Gila, Apache, and Maricopa counties for legal costs and expenses incurred from March 3, 1889, to June 30, 1898, for which the United States was liable under the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stats., 1004).

I find that there is now pending in this office an account of Gila County, Ariz., against the United States for disbursements (legal costs) and expenses incurred in said county in the matter of the prosecution and support during trial of Indians, which account has not been examined for the reason that the greater part of the claim is not covered by the provisions of joint resolution No. 42, approved August 6, 1894 (28 Stats., 589).

This resolution covered expenses from March 3, 1889, to June 30, 1898, only. The claim of Gila County, now pending, covers a payment represented as made as late as October 5, 1898. Under the act of March 3, 1885 (23 Stats., 385), and the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stats., 1004), the Government seems to be responsible for the payment of these expenses, but before the account between the United States and the county of Gila can be stated some action on the part of Congress would have to be taken, as was done in the case of those expenses which were incurred between the dates mentioned in the joint resolution No. 42, referred to above.

The passage of joint resolution (S. R. 151), with certain alterations, seems to be proper and necessary in order that the account of Gila County, now pending in this office, may be examined and certified for payment.

It is suggested that the following alterations be made in the resolution: In lines 3 and 4, the words "and the Comptroller of the Treasury be, and they" be stricken out; in line 4, the word "is" substituted for the word "are;" in line 10, the word "ninety-nine" substituted for the word "ninety-eight;" in line 14, the word "second" substituted for "third."

Respectfully,

ERNST G. TIMME, Auditor.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution to authorize certain officers of the Treasury Department to audit and certify claims of certain counties of Arizona."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me for a moment? There are a number of little bills which Senators are especially desirous of having passed to-day, and I would be glad if the Senator would agree to let us take fifteen or twenty minutes to call up by unanimous consent such bills to which there can be no objection.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. How many?

Mr. BERRY. I have one in which I am especially interested.

Mr. CLAY. For thirty minutes.

Mr. BERRY. That for about twenty-five or thirty minutes Senators may be recognized by the Chair.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If it is agreeable to the Senate that individual Senators shall call up particular bills for the next thirty minutes, I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that we have a unanimous-consent agreement that to-morrow after 2 o'clock the Senate shall proceed with the consideration of the Calendar of unobjected cases, subject to appropriation bills and conference reports.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will permit me, there are some bills which if they do not pass to-day will not get through, probably. There are a great many bills reached in running through the Calendar in which no Senator is particularly interested, and they consume a great deal of time. If we could have a unanimous-consent agreement that for thirty minutes the Chair should recognize Senators to call up bills to which there can be no objection, it would accommodate a good many Senators, and I should like to ask unanimous consent for such an arrangement, say, for thirty minutes.

Mr. FORAKER. I join in that request, and suggest that it be for twenty-five minutes simply, until 5 o'clock.

Mr. BERRY. For twenty-five minutes, until 5 o'clock.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall not object, but I will ask to-morrow that the Calendar be proceeded with.

Mr. BERRY. I certainly have no objection to that course.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that until 5 o'clock Senators may address the Chair in order to call up bills. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

JOHN J. SOUTHERLAND.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13598) granting a pension to John J. Southerland.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of John J. Southerland, late of Capt. Michael M. Gilbreath's company, Alabama scouts and guides, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS L. COLLINS.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 6123) granting an increase of pension to Thomas L. Collins.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-two" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas L. Collins, late of Company H, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSAN L. LYNCH.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14182) granting an increase of pension to Susan L. Lynch.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Susan B. Lynch, widow of George Lynch, late of Captain Irby's company, First Battalion Alabama Volunteers, war with Mexico, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUILDING FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4722) for the erection of a building for the use and accommodation of the Department of Agriculture.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 4, after the word "heating," to insert "and ventilating;" so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a suitable and commodious fireproof building, for the use and accommodation of the Department of Agriculture, to be erected on such portion of the grounds of the Department of Agriculture belonging to the United States as he may deem expedient, said building to be constructed in accordance with the approved plans heretofore secured in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1901, and he is hereby authorized, after due advertisement for proposals, to enter into contracts within the limit of cost hereby fixed and subject to appropriations to be made by Congress, for the erection of said building complete, including heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, and the removal of the present building or buildings of the Department of Agriculture on said grounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 16, after the word "heating," to insert "and ventilating," and in line 17, after the word "the," to insert "cost for;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the limit of cost for the construction of said building complete, including heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, and the cost for removal of the present building or buildings of the Department of Agriculture, is hereby fixed at $2,500,000, and no contract shall be entered into or expenditure authorized in excess of said amount.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACOB FINDLEY.

Mr. CLAY. I ask that the bill (H. R. 10856) granting a pension to Jacob Findley be taken up and passed.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Jacob Findley, late of Company F, One hundred and thirty-fifth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES A. CHALFANT.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask to call up the bill (H. R. 6005) granting a pension to James A. Chalfant.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of James A. Chalfant, late of Company F, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN SCOTT.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6023) for the relief of John Scott.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to examine and settle the claim of John Scott, late sutler Twenty-first Regiment New York Cavalry, for money alleged to be due him by certain enlisted men of that regiment who had died in the service or who had deserted.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a pretty dangerous precedent to establish, it seems to me, to provide that the Government of the United States shall pay claims of sutlers in the late war on soldiers who are dead or who deserted. It strikes me that it is going a long distance. I did not know the Government ever assumed any responsibility in such a case.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the report be read.

Mr. MARTIN. I am sure that one sentence will explain the bill to the satisfaction of every Senator. It only provides that the amount due to these soldiers who died in the service and which amount was due to this sutler and has never been paid by the Government to anyone at all shall be paid to the sutler. In accordance with the usage that existed in the payment to the men, the sutlers' claims were recognized. This sutler was in prison at the time, and the amount due from these soldiers has never been paid to the soldiers, and it was not paid to the sutler for that reason. The payment of the claim is recommended by the Department. It does not take from the Government one dollar except what was due to the soldiers and has not been paid over to those soldiers.

Mr. SPOONER. Who ascertains the amount due the sutler?

Mr. MARTIN. The Treasury Department ascertains it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the report be read.

Mr. MARTIN. The report is quite a long one.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest that if these payments had been made at the time the amount would have been paid to the sutler. It seems to me that is all there is of it.

Mr. SCOTT. The money, I understand, is now in the Treasury.

Mr. TELLER. Their personal representatives have never made any claim to it, and under the system the Government adopted they would have to wait until the sutler was paid before they could receive anything. The sutler has a sort of a lien on the pay.

Mr. SPOONER. Were the sutler's claims stopped on the pay roll against the soldiers' pay?

Mr. MARTIN. That is right. The amounts which it is sought now to turn over to the sutler were the amounts that were due to these soldiers and never have been paid over to them. The bill itself provides that nothing shall be paid to this sutler on account of anything due from the soldier if the soldier has been settled with. It only pays over to the sutler the amounts that have been withheld from the soldier because of the sutler's claims, which amounts would have been paid to the sutler but for the fact that the sutler was in prison.

Mr. SCOTT. I understand that the Government has the money in its hands and has not paid it.

Mr. MARTIN. It has the money in its hands now.

Mr. SCOTT. The money is in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I make one further inquiry? In case a soldier deserts, does the Government pay him?

Mr. MARTIN. As I understand it, in case a soldier deserts, of course he would have no right to his pay. But the usage in the Army was that the sutler made advances to soldiers and that when the soldier was settled with the amount due the sutler should be retained out of the amount to be paid to the soldier.

Mr. TELLER. And if he deserted, the Government paid to that extent.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The question is whether the usage was that if a soldier deserted the sutler should be paid.

Mr. MARTIN. I think beyond a doubt when the money was advanced for the soldier while he was doing service to the Government, the money which was earned by him ought to be paid to the man who advanced it.

Mr. SPOONER. I doubt if that ever was the rule. A soldier who deserted, as I understand it, forfeited all the pay due him.

Mr. MARTIN. He forfeited all his pay except such as had not been pledged, with the approval of the military organization at that time, to the sutler.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the sutler took his chance on the man remaining in the service or deserting.

Mr. MARTIN. I think it would be very hard to apply such a rule to this sutler who was in prison, and who would have gotten the money if he had not been in prison.

Mr. SPOONER. All these men did not desert?

Mr. MARTIN. No; some of them were deserters and some died in the service without collecting the money due them. I do not know what per cent of them were deserters, but some of them deserted. Some of them died in the service without collecting their money.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the bill be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read.

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. McCOMAS. I move, in line 8, after the word "service," to strike out the words "or who had deserted."

Mr. MARTIN. I care nothing for it, but that is not just. It is not right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WARREN C. PLUMMER.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12056) granting an increase of pension to Warren C. Plummer.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Warren C. Plummer, late first lieutenant Company C, Fifteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS M. BEEBE.

Mr. DEBOE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10964) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Beebe.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Francis M. Beebe, late of Company G, One hundred and fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAROLINE A. HAMMOND.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9187) granting an increase of pension to Caroline A. Hammond.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Caroline A. Hammond, widow of William P. Hammond, late of Captain Goodwyn's company of Alabama Volunteers, Creek Indian war, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, the same to be paid to her under the rules of the Pension Bureau as to mode and times of payment, without any deduction or rebate on account of any former erroneous payments of pension.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBION M. CHRISTIE.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2641) for the relief of Albion M. Christie,

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceed to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Albion M. Christie, assignee of Luke Christie, deceased, local inspector, $268.80, being the proceeds of Treasury warrant No. 2049, dated February 1, 1861, and drawn in favor of Luke Christie, local inspector, for that amount, in payment for work and labor performed by him as inspector of hulls at Savannah, Ga.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH H. PENNY AND OTHERS.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2978) for the relief of Joseph H. Penny, John W. Penny, Thomas Penny, and Harvey Penny, surviving partners of Penny & Sons.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction to rehear and reconsider and determine the motion filed in that court by the claimants on the 15th day of April, 1898, for a rehearing and new trial of the case of Penny & Sons v. The United States and Sioux Indians, numbered in the court as Indian depredations No. 4634; and to that end the bar of the statute of limitations against the motion is removed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESERVOIR SITES.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6250) to regulate the use by the public of reservoir sites located upon the public lands of the United States.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWIN P. JOHNSON.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9308) granting an increase of pension to Edwin P. Johnson.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Edwin P. Johnson, late of Company E, Thirteenth Regiment United States Infantry, war with Mexico, and to pay him a pension of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. I wish to call up the bill (H. R. 159) providing for free homesteads on the public lands for actual and bona fide settlers in the North one-half of the Colville Indian Reservation, State of Washington, and reserving the public lands for that purpose. It has been read once, and it is not necessary to read it again.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not desire to interpose any factious objection to that bill, but there will have to be quite an extended statement made as to the effect of it when it is considered. There is no time to make it this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill goes over, retaining its place.

READING MATTER FOR THE BLIND.

Mr. QUARLES. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 2644) to promote the circulation of reading matter among the blind.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read in full to the Senate. The amendments of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will be stated.

The amendments were in section 1, line 5, after the word "packages," to insert "and containing no advertising or other matter whatever," and in line 7, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "four" and insert "ten;" so as to make the section read:

That books, pamphlets, and other reading matter in raised characters for the use of the blind, whether prepared by hand or printed, in single volumes or in packages, and containing no advertising or other matter whatever, unsealed and not exceeding 10 pounds in weight, when sent by public institutions for the blind as a loan to blind readers, or when returned by the latter to such institutions, shall be transmitted in the United States mails free of postage.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask consideration of the bill (S. 6045) granting an increase of pension to Charles Sprague.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FORAKER. I appeal to the Senator from West Virginia to delay his motion just one moment. It is only a pension bill, and it will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield for a pension bill?

Mr. SCOTT. I would be delighted to do so if there were not so many of my friends standing up who will ask me to do the same thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 26, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 25, 1902.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and ever-living God, our Father, look down we beseech Thee with compassion upon our infirmities, and forgive our sins. Deliver us from all sinister motives, and from the evil which doth so easily beset us. Help us to live to the high-water mark of Christian manhood seven days in the week. Be with all who are in distress or sorrow, all who are suffering, and comfort them.

Hear us especially when we pray for the King of England. If it is in accordance with Thy will, grant that he may be restored to strength to guide and control his nation in justice and equity under Thy direction; in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON and Mr. HULL rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman from Illinois thinks that his bill should come in first, I am perfectly willing.

Mr. CANNON. I think that in five minutes we can dispose of it. I call up the conference report on the sundry civil bill and ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the conference report on the sundry civil bill and asks unanimous consent to waive the reading of the report, and that the statement only be read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement was read.

[For text of the statement and conference report see page 7336.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a single word. The Senate amendments to this bill aggregated six and one-half million dollars in round numbers, $2,700,000 of which was for the rebate on the tobacco tax. That was agreed to. After that was agreed to the remaining amendments were divided about half and half.

I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What amount is now carried by the bill?

Mr. CANNON. Sixty million dollars in round numbers.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How does this amount compare with the sundry civil bill in the last Congress? I do not carry it in my mind.

Mr. CANNON. This is something less than in the last Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Can the gentleman state how much less?

Mr. CANNON. About $1,000,000, as I now recollect it.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12804) making appropriations for the Army.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read, and not the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the statement only be read and the reading of the report be omitted. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement was read.

[For conference report and statement, see House proceedings of June 23.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, this report virtually, if adopted, closes up all matters of difference between the two Houses except on amendments 14 and 15. I will bring that up after the adoption of the report, if it should be adopted, and I ask a vote on the adoption of the report.

Mr. HAY. I will state to the gentleman from Iowa in the reading of the statement I did not hear the amendment proposed by the Senate with reference to men in the Army who stood examinations for commission. I did not hear it read as to what the result was.

Mr. HULL. The Senate recedes.

Mr. HAY. That is what I know, but I did not hear it read.

Mr. HULL. That is amendment numbered 4. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker, on the adoption of the report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Speaker, amendments numbered 14 and 15 have not yet been agreed to. Amendment numbered 14 is where the Senate struck out "three" and inserted "four," making the appropriation for barracks and quarters $4,000,000.

Mr. HAY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes; for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HAY. I desire to know whether the gentleman from Iowa can call up something which is not in the conference report, except by the consent of the House?

Mr. HULL. If it disposes of the bill, Mr. Speaker, I should imagine I had the right to present anything that will pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Virginia that the conference report is agreed to, and all that was submitted to the House for approval has been disposed of. This is as to those matters which are not yet disposed of, and therefore it is proper for the gentleman to bring it to the attention of the House.

Mr. HAY. If the Speaker will permit me, these matters were taken out of the conference by order of the House.

The SPEAKER. And therefore must be met by the House in order to dispose of them.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, No. 14 simply increases the appropriation for barracks and quarters, without any change in the law, or any change in the language of the appropriation, from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000. Amendment numbered 15 made a reappropriation of $350,000, and in addition to that changed the language under which the appropriations could be used. The House took occasion to contest and to strike out all that relating to the reappropriation, and also as to the change of language, and adopted a part of the amendment of the Senate, and in conference the Senate conferees declined to take any action whatever on amendment 15.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to hear what the gentleman says unless he speaks louder.

Mr. HULL. Some gentlemen say that it is not in conference. It was not in conference in shape that the House conferees could consider any more suggestions looking to the modifying of these two amendments; but, Mr. Speaker, I hardly think it would not be in conference to the extent that if the Senate had receded from its disagreement to the action of the House we could have brought in a full report taking the entire matter out of controversy, and by the adoption of the report would have passed the bill. So that to this extent it was in conference. It was in conference to the extent that we could discuss it, that we could lay the matter before the conferees, that we could come to some arrangement, or we could reach an agreement that the Senate would agree to the action of the House; so that when gentlemen say that it was not in conference they do not state the whole truth. The conferees in full——

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, I still think that formally, technically, the two amendments were not in conference. The only way that the Senate could have disposed of them, or they could have been disposed of up to this time, would have been for the Senate to have receded from its amendment on 14 and to have agreed to the House amendment on 15. But let that be as it may, if the gentleman has any information, now that it is up to the House again, has any information or suggestion to make as to how this matter can be accommodated, it seems that the House is entitled to know it by a motion or suggestion.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the very fact that we could have made a full agreement, not only on what we have brought in, but on these two amendments by the Senate receding from its action, is evident that it was before us to that extent. But, Mr. Speaker, in the discussion of the conferees I agreed to test the sense of the House on a motion which I shall offer.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise a point of order. There is absolutely nothing before the House.

Mr. HULL. I will make the motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I confess there is some novelty in the matter.

Mr. HULL. It is a very ordinary procedure, and the gentleman from Tennessee is guilty as often as any man on the floor of this House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not catch the remark of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL. I say this is an ordinary procedure—to make an explanation before making the motion—something that happens every day, and the gentleman from Tennessee has been guilty of doing it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if the gentleman from Tennessee insists upon his point of order the Chair will be obliged to sustain it.

Mr. HULL. I recognize the point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I will move that the House recede from its adherence to amendment 14 and agree to the Senate amendment by striking out the word "four" and inserting "three million three hundred and fifty thousand;" so that it will read: "three million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars." Now, Mr. Speaker, after the motion is stated I desire to give an explanation of that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House recede from its adherence to the disagreement to amendment 14 and agree to the same with the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "four million" and insert "three million three hundred and fifty thousand."

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the Senate conferees in the discussion of these points at issue between the two Houses are willing to recede from all legislation, leaving——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to make the point of order, in order that the question may be presented fairly, that the House, having adhered to this proposition, can not now retreat. It is too late. The House has adhered to the disagreement to the amendment by a solemn vote, which is the highest action the House can take; and having adhered, it is not in order for the House to now retreat.

Mr. HULL. I am willing to submit that to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. While an adherence is the highest expression the House can give in respect to an amendment, still it is never beyond the power of the House to recede from adherence, and there are abundant authorities where this has been done.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to argue after the Chair has ruled; but what is the distinction between a mere insistence and adherence?

The SPEAKER. That is a question of parliamentary law; but the Chair will state that it is to indicate to the other House how strongly it disagrees, but it never passes beyond the power of the House to recede from its adherence if it so desires.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the only question between the two Houses is on one proposition. The Senate conferees express themselves ready to agree to our amendment No. 15 providing we give this increase on the appropriation. They have already receded from other points of the bill more than making up this amount. This is the only point where there was an issue involved that they are insisting that they are right, and that they must have that amount in order to reach a final agreement on the bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to ask the chairman a question. I believe we gave two millions in the sundry civil bill and three millions in the Army bill and two millions in the Philippine proposition, which makes seven millions for buildings. Now, I want to ask if it did not develop in the conference that $350,000 is merely to sustain their dignity, and did it not develop that there was no necessity for it?

Mr. HULL. No, it did not. I will say that the Secretary of War and the Adjutant-General insisted that on account of the large number of troops returning from the Philippines in excess of the number that it was assumed would be brought home when the estimate was submitted, that they needed all that the Senate gave in order to provide for these troops. Not only that, but with this amount they would perhaps have to put some of the troops in tents during the coming winter, and they wanted to push ahead the construction of barracks and quarters. It also developed in the conference, if I am permitted to refer to that, a Senator representing the gentleman's own party said that as far as he was concerned he had been with the contention of the House up to that point, but if we did not concede the $350,000, so far as his opinion was concerned, so far as his efforts were concerned, so far as his advocacy was concerned, the bill might die; he would not surrender everything for nothing.

Now, I am not here to say whether it will die or not if we refuse to recede, but I do say that in the closing days of the session for this House to refuse this one concession, this one little amendment, and send it back without further adherence, is taking a course that it seems to me we ought not to take. There is nothing involved in the controversy which would justify such action by the House. So far as the War Department is concerned, if we are to build what the Secretary of War says, every dollar of money will be needed for temporary quarters until permanent barracks can be erected in their place.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. One other question. How could the Senate let down from $1,000,000 to $350,000? If the $1,000,000 was necessary, why did they not contend for it?

Mr. HULL. They did contend for it until we told them there was no use to discuss it, and, Mr. Speaker, the committee of conference, I think, went over this ground as thoroughly as they could, and I can say to the House that, according to the report of the Senate conferees, if we adopt this amendment I have proposed and insist on our amendment to No. 15, it will go to the Senate and be adopted and the bill will become a law. It was not giving half and half, as is the rule in so many conferences. It was absorbing nearly everything in the way of appropriations contended for by the House, and everything contended for by the House in the way of legislation.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Does the gentleman not think the $3,000,000 is ample?

Mr. HULL. No; I do not, after talking with the Secretary of War. I did think so until then, but I do not now.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me some time?

Mr. HULL. We are reducing the force in the Philippines and bringing them home to the extent of at least 15,000 more men than was anticipated four months ago we could do at this time. This is for taking care of them in the United States. I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HAY. I would like to have about fifteen minutes.

Mr. HULL. I would be glad if the gentleman can get through with ten.

Mr. HAY. I think I can.

Mr. HULL. I will be satisfied with that.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] if he is going to say anything about this business.

Mr. HULL. Yes; I am going to yield some time to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will yield to me just a moment or two now, I will say what I think about it, if it is agreeable to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HAY. That is satisfactory.

Mr. HULL. Then I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the House recollects the commencement of this contention. The instruction of the House ran against the legislation proposed in these amendments. Now, then, the legislation is entirely eliminated from the first amendment. The second amendment does not abound in legislation. It merely fixes the amount to be appropriated. The original estimate was $3,000,000. If this motion prevail, then we will send it to the Senate with an increase of $350,000, making $3,350,000 instead of $4,000,000, which is an increase of $350,000. As to the next amendment, the House amendment which we adopted the other day to 14, as to which I presume the gentleman will move that the House further insist upon its amendment that eliminates the $350,000 appropriation in the last amendment, namely, 15, and eliminates the legislation. Thus is accomplished the contention of the House when it instructed its conferees not to assent to any legislation in connection with these three amendments. It leaves the Senate assenting to the position of the House and the House in every respect vindicating its opinion when the instructions were adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If that is true, I would ask the gentleman why he instructed the conferees in the first place so emphatically not to agree to the $350,000 which he now concedes?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, they were not so instructed at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Oh, yes.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why, the conferees were instructed——

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, he is in error. Our conferees were instructed not to agree to any provisions that changed existing law. They were not instructed at all as to the amounts carried in any of the amendments.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Not at all; but the instruction given our conferees was to adhere, which took these amendments out of the conference, not only as to the legislation, but as to the amount.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but it said as to 13, 14, and 15 we adhered—the conferees could not consider them.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why, of course.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, I am speaking of the instructions that were given in the first instance. They were aimed at the legislation in these amendments. They were in no way aimed nor did they cover the amount of money carried by these amendments. They were against the legislation originating in the Senate. Now, then, that covers the whole contention upon the part of the House. The other day the House did adhere to two of these amendments, but amended the other amendments. The Senate receded from one of the three and the other two are yet undisposed of; but the gentleman now states a situation by which it is patent to the House that its contention against legislation upon this bill is complied with by the Senate and by the House and at the same time the appropriation is decreased $1,000,000.

Mr. HULL. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I only want a moment in which to say that this is a square and complete back down on the part of the conferees on the part of the House and on the part of the House itself, if the motion prevails, from its position first taken in this matter. We may disguise it as we will, but by our former action we took these three amendments 13, 14, and 15, out of the conference, and the House of Representatives, under the leadership of my friend from Illinois, followed unanimously by this side of the House, said to these conferees by way of instructions: "You shall not consider these amendments, 13, 14, and 15. We adhere to those amendments, and if the Senate will not consent to give them up the bill shall fail."

Now, that is the position. It is no use at this time to go through all the different forms of legislation that have been pursued—first, the Senate ignoring our request for a conference, the House ignoring the request for a conference from the Senate, etc. We come at last to the point that the proposition was squarely met; that the Senate is to have its way substantially as to amendments 14 and 15, although not entirely, but it does give up amendment 13.

Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives said it would not consent to that. Now, it is proposed to abandon that position and to consent. So far as I am concerned, I am not ready to do it. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me to read the instructions, this is what they were——

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has the floor unless he yields.

Mr. HAY. I want to make my statement and then I will yield.

Mr. CANNON. It ought to come in right here.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman wants this to come in here so he can answer, I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois, and not take the time out of the time of the gentleman from Virginia.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois desire?

Mr. CANNON. I only want a minute.

Mr. HULL. I yield two minutes, if the gentleman wants it, simply to read the instructions.

Mr. CANNON. This was the instruction on the part of the House. I hope the House will give me its attention:

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 12804 are instructed—not to recommend an agreement to said amendments numbered 13, 14, and 15 or to any modification thereof that will, under authority of said Army appropriation act, permit the expenditure of any sum for the construction of permanent buildings at established military posts except as authorized by section 1136 of the Revised Statutes.

There is the instruction; it speaks for itself, and the proposed arrangement by the gentleman from Iowa absolutely complies with it.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, when this question first came before the House I did not think it was right that the House conferees should be instructed in advance, and I voted with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. The ground upon which the gentleman from Illinois put these instructions, or one of them, taken up and followed out by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], was that the Senate was increasing beyond what was necessary the appropriation for barracks. Now, the Secretary of War made the estimate upon the idea of an army of 87,000 men, for $3,000,000 for barracks and quarters, not for the Philippines, but for this country.

That estimate was incorporated into the Army appropriation bill in the House. When it went to the Senate, without any further estimate being sent by the Secretary of War, without any official communication whatsoever from the War Department, that appropriation was increased by $4,000,000, and when it came back here the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] dwelt particularly upon this increase. He talked about the duplication of appropriations and about the large amount that the Senate was putting upon this bill, and members upon this side voted with him, not because they were fearful of taking from him the jurisdiction of which he was so jealous, but because they thought they were preventing a large appropriation from getting upon this bill when it was not necessary for it to be there.

Now, the various appropriations which have been made for barracks and quarters amount to $7,000,000, all that the Department has asked for—$2,000,000 in the Philippines, $2,000,000 in the sundry civil bill, and $3,000,000 for these barracks and quarters, of which not more than $20,000 can be expended upon any one of them. Now, we are asked to add $350,000 to this appropriation. Why? Not because it is needed, not because the War Department can not get along without it, but because we must do something to heal the wounded feelings of the Senate of the United States. Now, that is the whole of it, and that is all of it. The gentleman from Iowa a moment ago said that Senator COCKRELL said that if we did not agree to this $350,000, the bill could die, so far as he was concerned.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is not that exactly what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] have said in respect to this amendment that they put on?

Mr. HAY. Unquestionably.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to the parliamentary rule that members of the other House can not be named in debate.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman from Iowa named him.

Mr. HULL. I did not.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman said the Democrat on the conference committee, which is the same thing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that when a member uses the name of a member of the other House the Chair will promptly call him to order. The Chair knows that the gentleman will be glad to comply with the rule.

Mr. HAY. If I have not complied with the rule I am sorry, but it is the same thing and it makes no difference. I say that the whole point of this amendment is to heal the wounded feelings of the Senate because this House saw fit to instruct us in regard to this amendment. I never had any question of the right of the House to instruct its conferees.

I did not think it was courteous to the conferees, but it was not because it would hurt the feelings of the Senate that I had any scruples about it; because the House has that right, and has the right to exercise it at any time; and I say that gentlemen accepting this compromise, if they are willing to vote for the motion of the gentleman from Iowa are receding from what they did, and they are receding from what the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Pennsylvania said they never would recede from. If they want to do it, it is all right; but they ought to do that with the knowledge of the fact that it is done, not because we need the $350,000 for these Army posts, but it is because we are doing something to heal the wounded feelings of the Senate. For one, I shall vote against the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, just one word in conclusion. There is no principle of surrender involved on the part of the House on a single question we have been instructed upon. There is no yielding on the part of the House on any principle that has been at issue between the Senate and the House. There is simply an increase of $350,000, and that only in this one case of barracks or quarters. The Senate yields $1,350,000 of its amendment, and my motion would make the House yield only $350,000.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HULL. For a question only.

Mr. CLARK. I want to ask you a question. If you were right then, what was the sense of the gentleman from Illinois getting up that hullabaloo and having that extraordinary committee appointed?

Mr. HULL. That was simply a question raised by an instruction which changed the legislation, which he claimed then would make a duplication of accounts. This amendment, if my motion shall be adopted bringing the House to an agreement, does not lead to any duplication of accounts, because it secures the same line of demarcation in this bill as we have had heretofore, as the gentleman from Illinois stated in his remarks a few moments ago. Now, on the question raised by the gentleman from Virginia, that the estimates were only $3,000,000. That is true. The estimates were made up last September. It was estimated that at that time at least 35,000 troops should be kept in the Philippine Islands.

Subsequent events have developed that we can bring a much larger number home, at least 12,000 more troops will be brought to this country in the next two or three months than it was formerly thought would be possible. They will have to be cared for at these posts. The only way to care for them is to provide enough for barracks and quarters to make them comfortable, and the gentleman objects. The Democratic party in this matter is simply following its uniform rule of opposing everything that would benefit the Army of the United States. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is not correct in that statement.

Mr. HULL. I move the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We followed the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is not in order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman if he will yield?

Mr. HULL. No; I do not.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman has intentionally misrepresented this side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend until he has consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman has intentionally misrepresented this side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is not in order. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. HULL. I yield one minute to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then, I say we followed the leadership of the gentleman from Illinois in this opposition, and now the gentleman says that the Democratic side was opposing something for the benefit of the Army. He should read that lecture to the gentleman from Illinois. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for thirty seconds?

Mr. HULL. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois, and then I will yield one minute to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there is no chance for disagreement about this matter. I say that the contention of the House in the beginning by this arrangement is sustained. Now, then, touching the amount that is involved, I see no politics in it. I think we could get along very well without the $350,000, and still I am inclined to allow them the $350,000 over the estimates on the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then I ask the gentleman, if there is no politics in it, why the gentleman from Iowa should have assailed the Democratic side for following your leadership?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not yield.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman yielded by bowing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman should wait until request has been made.

Mr. HULL. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that I have ever in my whole service in this House been in any way opposed to taking care of the Army is absolutely untrue, and the statement that the Democratic party has done anything against the Army or has spoken against it or taken any steps which would reflect upon it, is a slander to which gentlemen on that side resort only that they may obtain some cheap capital in the coming Congressional campaign. [Great applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HULL. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the same purpose as did the gentleman from Virginia. I deny that my action in the committee or in the House in connection with Army legislation has been controlled by politics. I think that when my friend who is chairman of the committee, who is usually both fair and courteous, ceases to be blinded by passion he will at least recall what he has just now said, and I appeal to him, as a fair and honest-minded man, to say if he believes that my action in connection with military legislation, in the committee or in the House, has ever been controlled by dishonest or unworthy motives. I deny his statement absolutely so far as it was applied to me. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I referred to the party and not individuals, and now I will refer gentlemen on the other side to the last speech made in this House by the late Hon. Amos J. Cummings. I now move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on receding from the adherence to the disagreement and agreeing to the amendment with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HAY) there were—130 ayes and 70 noes.

So the motion of Mr. HULL was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Our leader, Mr. CANNON, having abandoned us, we shall refuse to follow him any further. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its amendment to the Senate amendment 15.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House further insist on its amendment to the amendment No. 15.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the several votes just taken was laid on the table.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the naval appropriation bill, and I ask that the reading of the report be omitted and that the statement only be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, asks unanimous consent that the reading of the report be omitted and that the statement only be read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the statement of the House conferees, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14046) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report on each of the amendments of the Senate, viz:

On No. 12: Inserts the provision enabling the Secretary of the Navy to purchase necessary land for coal depots, $640,000, and authorizes the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow all expenditures heretofore made for land purchased for use as naval coal depots out of said appropriation, as proposed by the Senate, but strikes out the provision, as proposed by the Senate, for a reappropriation of unexpended balances made for the establishment of naval coal depots.

On No. 14: Appropriates $200, as increase to the salary of one clerk at the navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H., as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 15: Corrects the total of paragraph by said amount.

On Nos. 16, 17, and 18: Changes the form of expression of two writers, as proposed by the Senate, but does not increase the appropriation.

On Nos. 19 and 20: Changes form of expression, as proposed by the Senate, but does not change the appropriation.

On No. 21: Inserts one clerk in charge of distribution of books, at $1,200.

On No. 22: Changes the total of said paragraph to correspond with above increase.

On No. 23: Changes the total appropriation in the civil establishment, Bureau of Equipment, to conform to the above increase.

On No. 27: Appropriates $60,000 for the completion of building No. 19, and $1,500 for an extension to dispensary building in New York Navy-Yard.

On No. 28: Changes totals in appropriations for New York Navy-Yard in accordance with the above.

On No. 29: Authorizes the Secretary of the Navy in his discretion to condemn a certain tract of land, or so much thereof as may be necessary, adjacent to the Norfolk Navy-Yard, and to report such proceedings to the next session of Congress.

On No. 30: Appropriates $25,950 to complete the purchase of land already condemned and partially appropriated for at Key West, Fla.

On No. 31: Changes the totals in appropriations for naval station at Key West, Fla.

On Nos. 32 and 33: Increases the appropriation from $2,000 to $4,000, or so much as may be necessary, as proposed by the Senate, for additional land at the navy-yard, Puget Sound, Washington.

On No. 34: Changes the totals in appropriations for navy-yard, Puget Sound, Washington, to conform to above.

On No. 35: Strikes out unnecessary language, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 36: Changes form of expression, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 41: Strikes out appropriation of $150,000 for improving harbor at San Luis d'Apra, island of Guam, as proposed by Senate.

On No. 42: Inserts caption, "Plans and specifications for public works," as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 44: Strikes out appropriation of additional $100,000 for naval hospital, Naval Academy, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 45: Inserts provision, as proposed by the Senate, permitting the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to continue improvements at the Naval Academy, either by contract or by day labor, or both, as he may deem necessary for the best interests of the Government.

On No. 48: Strikes out additional appropriation of $5,000 for Naval Observatory, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 49: Strikes out appropriation of $2,000 for expenses of board of visitors to the Naval Observatory, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 50: Authorizes an increase of 1,000 copies of the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives and Navy Department, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 51: Authorizes appropriation of $30,000, as proposed by the Senate, for repairs and improvements on buildings and construction of a contagious disease hospital at Mare Island, Cal.

On Nos. 54 and 55: Insert the word "each," as proposed by the Senate, a verbal omission.

On No. 59: Strikes out appropriation of $3,800, as proposed by the Senate, for clerks at naval station, Cavite, P. I.

On No. 60: Strikes out increase in total appropriations, as proposed by the Senate, civil establishment, Bureau of Construction and Repair.

On No. 65: Strikes out appropriation of $1,200, as proposed by the Senate, for one writer at naval station, Cavite, P. I.

On No. 66: Strikes out the increase in total appropriations, as proposed by the Senate, for naval establishment, Bureau of Steam Engineering, to conform to the above.

On No. 67: Strikes out appropriation for $1,000 for an assistant librarian at Naval Academy.

On No. 69: Strikes out increase in total appropriations, as proposed by the Senate, for Naval Academy to conform to above.

On No. 72: Inserts a provision, as proposed by the Senate, for extending the use of the appropriation of $3,000 for clerk hire, carriages, and other incidental and necessary expenses of the Board of Visitors at Naval Academy.

On No. 78: Strikes out increase in totals of appropriations for Naval Academy, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 79: Restores sections 8, 9, and 10 of the act approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States."

On No. 80: Inserts a provision that the present Commandant of the Marine Corps shall have the rank, pay, and allowance of a major-general in the Army, but this shall not extend to his successor or successors.

On No. 81: Increases the appropriation, as proposed by the Senate, for the pay of noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates, and for the expenses of clerks of the United States Marine Corps from $1,112,548 to $1,236,028.

On No. 82: Adds to the enlisted force of the Marine Corps now authorized by law, as proposed by the Senate, 10 gunnery-sergeants, 40 sergeants, 60 corporals, 10 drummers, 10 trumpeters, and 620 privates.

On No. 83: Increases the appropriation for "Provisions, Marine Corps," as proposed by the Senate, from $396,071.50 to $445,071.50.

On No. 84: Increases the appropriation for "Clothing of the Marine Corps" from $40,000 to $82,600.

On No. 85: Increases the appropriation for "Military stores," as proposed by the Senate, from $40,297 to $50,297.

On No. 86: Increases the appropriation for "Transportation and recruiting the Marine Corps," as proposed by the Senate, from $100,000 to $110,000.

On No. 87: Increases the appropriation for "Contingent, Marine Corps," as proposed by the Senate, from $91,700 to $103,700.

On No. 90: Inserts a provision, as proposed by the Senate:

"All contracts of the Carnegie Steel Company, Limited, heretofore made between it and the United States, shall be completed by its successor—the Carnegie Steel Company or its lawful successor—which has acquired and assumed, or may acquire and assume, all of its assets and all of its liabilities under the said contracts. And the said Carnegie Steel Company, or its lawful successor, upon giving security in proper form and amount, conditioned for the performance by it of the said contracts according to the true intent and meaning thereof, shall be substituted therein for the said Carnegie Steel Company, Limited, and be entitled to exercise all rights thereunder which the said Carnegie Steel Company, Limited, had or would have had if it had continued in existence."

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the following amendments, viz:

On No. 1, relating to total appropriation for the pay of the Navy.

On Nos. 7 and 13, relating to the "Maintenance of colliers," as to whether this provision should be under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Navigation or the Bureau of Equipment.

On No. 9, as to whether the unexpended balances remaining in the Treasury on June 30, 1902, from the appropriation for "Ordnance and ordnance stores, 1900, or so much thereof as may be necessary," should be reappropriated for expenditure in the fulfillment of contracts heretofore made and properly chargeable to said appropriation.

On No. 24, as to the increase in the corps of civil engineers.

On Nos. 25 and 26, as to an appropriation of $500 for making an examination concerning the furnishing water supply of Portsmouth Navy-Yard, and an appropriation of $200,000 toward the removal of Hendersons Point, near said navy-yard.

On Nos. 37, 38, 39, and 40, as to appropriations to the amount of $657,300 for naval station at Charleston, S. C.

On No. 43, as to total appropriations in all for public works, Bureau of Yards and Docks.

On No. 46, as to the appropriation of $100,000 for the construction of a building for Bureau of Equipment at Pensacola Navy-Yard.

On No. 47, as to the total appropriation for public works, Bureau of Ordnance.

On No. 52, as to the increase in the corps of surgeons.

On No. 56, as to an appropriation of $2,000 for one bookkeeper and one clerk at Pensacola Navy-Yard.

On No. 57, as to increase in total appropriations for civil establishment, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts.

On No. 58, as to the increase in the Pay Corps.

On No. 61, as to the increase in the corps of naval constructors.

On No. 64, as to an appropriation of $200,000 toward the construction of an experimental station and testing laboratory in the department of marine engineering and naval construction at Annapolis.

On No. 76, as to an increase in the corps of midshipmen at the Naval Academy.

On No. 77, as to a provision authorizing all examinations for admission to the Naval Academy to be held at Annapolis.

On No. 88, as to an appropriation of $1,500 for improvements at the marine barracks, navy-yard, Boston.

On No. 89, as to changes in the amount of total appropriations for public works, Marine Corps.

On No. 91, as to "Increase of the Navy" and the method of construction of new ships authorized, whether they shall be built by contract or some in Government navy-yards, or the whole subject be left within the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy.

On No. 92, as to the provision requiring the Secretary of the Navy to contract for five more Holland torpedo boats at a cost of $170,000 each, after the acceptance of one of said boats now being built for the Government.

On No. 93, as to a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to have tested any completed submarine boats or boats other than the Holland type, and purchase, in his discretion, one of the same, if found to be equal or superior to the best submarine torpedo boat then in use in the Navy, at a price not to exceed $170,000.

The bill as passed by the Senate appropriated $79,351,238.13, being an increase of $1,731,305 over the amount carried as it was passed by the House. Of this sum, the committee of conference recommend that $179,375 be stricken out and that $371,130 be agreed to.

GEORGE EDMUND FOSS,
ALSTON G. DAYTON,
ADOLPH MEYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

[For conference report, see page 7264.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I would state that this report leaves in disagreement certain Senate amendments, particularly the increase in the different staff corps in the Navy; the question of the maintenance of colliers, whether that provision should be under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Navigation or under the Bureau of Equipment; the question as to the construction of our ships, whether they should be built in the Government navy-yards or by private contract or by both, and also the further question as to the Holland submarine torpedo boats. These matters are in disagreement. Now I will move that the report be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY].

Mr. RIXEY. I notice the conferees have agreed on the amendments 80 and 82. Eighty is an amendment providing for the increase of the rank of Brigadier-General Heywood to that of major-general. No. 82 increases the Marine Corps. There were quite a number of amendments increasing other corps of the Navy, and I wanted to ask the gentleman if there was any reason why the conferees should have agreed to increasing the Marine Corps and not passing upon the other corps?

Mr. FOSS. If the gentleman will notice, the increase is in the number of privates, 620, and in the petty officers; not in higher officers of the corps, as was considered in the committee.

Mr. RIXEY. There is an increase in the rank of General Heywood?

Mr. FOSS. The Senate was very insistent on the increase in his rank, but that was not to apply to his successor. It was simply done as a reward to General Heywood, who had been in charge of the Marine Corps during the Spanish war, and at the same time is a soldier of the civil war.

Mr. RIXEY. I will state to my friend that I was under the impression that the increase in all the corps was not to be consented to, but should be considered by the House Naval Committee and a special bill brought in for all the corps.

Mr. FOSS. That was the general understanding, as to the increase in the number of lieutenants, of captains, lieutenant-colonels, or colonels of course that would apply.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to agree to the conference report.

The question was taken and the report agreed to.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Speaker, as to these amendments which are in disagreement, I understand that my colleague upon the committee desires a vote upon 92, I think, and 93, with reference to the increase in the number of Holland torpedo boats. If there are no other votes demanded, I desire to make a motion.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I think we had about as well dispose of the question of the increase of cadets at Annapolis. It seems to me that we can agree on something very near to the amendment of the Senate, unless he prefers to have that go back to conference. I will leave it, however, to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FOSS. I would suggest to the gentleman that we go back to conference on that provision.

Mr. RIXEY. Very well, Mr. Speaker; I shall not insist upon it.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Speaker, as to all amendments, except 92 and 93, referring to submarine boats, namely, Nos. 1, 7, 9, 13, 24, 25, 26, 37, 38, 39, 40, 43, 46, 47, 52, 56, 57, 58, 61, 64, 76, 77, 88, 89, and 91, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any other amendments than 92 and 93? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no such demand. Without objection, then, the vote will be put in gross. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House insist upon its disagreement to these amendments of the Senate.

The question was taken, and the motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague for the purpose of making a motion.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendments 92 and 93, and concur therein.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on the amendments 92 and 93?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the amendments read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

(92) Additional submarine boats: That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and required to contract with the Holland Torpedo Boat Company for five of its most improved type of submarine torpedo boats, to be built under the plans and specifications of said company, at a cost not to exceed the price contracted to be paid for the Holland boats now being built for the Navy Department: Provided, That no contract shall be made with the said company until one of the Holland boats now being built for the Department shall have been accepted by the Secretary of the Navy.

(93) That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to have tested any completed submarine boat or boats, other than the Holland type, that may be presented to him for trial within six months after the passage of this act, and if he shall find by said tests that any of the said boats, if one or more than one is presented, shall be equal or superior to the best submarine torpedo boat which shall then be in use in the Navy, he is authorized, in his discretion, to purchase the best one of the said boats at a price not to exceed $170,000.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey moves in respect to these two amendments that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the amendments.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, we desire separate votes upon these propositions, and I want to ask my colleague if he desires any time for discussion.

Mr. WHEELER. Do I understand that the gentleman from Illinois demands a separate vote?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, there are some members who desire to discuss this matter. How much time does the gentleman think will be proper?

Mr. FOSS. Inasmuch as the gentleman will take the affirmative of the proposition, I would ask him.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Well, the gentleman controls the time. I would say that I think we ought to have half an hour on a side. I understand the desire of members in charge of the Philippine bill to be to get along with that bill as quickly as possible. I have no desire to block them in their progress whatever, and I would think thirty minutes on a side would be ample. This matter has been very well ventilated in hearings before the committee, and I might say frankly to the gentleman that I believe the members of the House are very conversant with the subject. Unless he himself, having control of the time, desires to consume any of it in opposition to this amendment, we upon the affirmative have no desire to take up any of the time of the House in opposition to the progress of the Philippine measure.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Illinois to what his demand for a division applies, whether as to the motion of the gentleman or of the two sections?

Mr. FOSS. Of the two sections.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that I shall demand a division of the vote to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a division, then, on the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to my colleague that, inasmuch as some gentlemen here desire to discuss the proposition, we take half an hour on a side and then come to a vote.

The SPEAKER. Under the demands made, the first question will be on receding from the House disagreement to amendment 92. Was any agreement reached as to time?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Half an hour on a side.

The SPEAKER. That will have to be referred to the House, unless that can be done within the hour.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That can be done within the hour.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] yield half an hour to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. FOSS. I would like to ask unanimous consent that we have debate on this proposition for one hour—thirty minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER] and thirty minutes by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Objection was made.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois yield out of his hour to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. FOSS. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has an hour on this motion.

Mr. FOSS. Then I yield to my colleague thirty minutes.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I yield fifteen minutes of the time allotted to me to my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN].

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, these amendments of the Senate on which the gentleman from New Jersey has made this motion to recede and concur pertain to the submarine torpedo boats. It is a question for this House to decide whether we shall have more submarine torpedo boats than we now have, and if we are going to have them, whether we are going to authorize them by this bill. As for myself, I believe the submarine torpede boat is an effective machine for the defense of our harbors. Before our committee two years ago Admiral Dewey spoke highly of the effectiveness of the torpedo boats, especially in regard to the moral effect the presence of a torpedo boat would have upon an enemy approaching a harbor. If there had been two torpedo boats in Manila Harbor and Admiral Dewey and his men had known of their presence there the American fleet would never have entered that harbor. No commander of a fleet will take his fleet into a harbor where he knows there are submarine torpedo boats, for the plain reason that he knows there would be a strong probability of his battle ships being blown up and hundreds of lives destroyed, and if that should occur that he would be written down in history as a reckless man, and would be censured by all the world for such a reckless and needless risk of human life.

Another thing: For the cost of one battle ship we can have enough submarine torpedo boats constructed, according to estimates furnished by a Navy Department official, to give each harbor on the Atlantic coast and each harbor on the Pacific coast two submarine torpedo boats. In other words, we could furnish ample and, I believe, complete protection to every harbor on the United States coast—the old United States, over which the Constitution is, I mean—by means of these torpedo boats. A battle ship costs six or seven million dollars. That amount of money will buy 60 or 70 of these torpedo boats at $100,000 apiece, and we could distribute these among our harbors of the old United States and have ample protection against any hostile fleet that might wish to attack us.

But some one may say that these men who furnish the torpedo boats want to charge the United States an exorbitant price. Why, Mr. Speaker, that is a question of detail with which the Department may struggle under the provisions of these Senate amendments. Those who have invented these torpedo boats should have fair profit; but they should not be allowed to "gouge" the Government unduly. This amendment puts it in the power of the Secretary of the Navy to make contracts, and he should not permit a gouge to be made. We ought to get these boats at reasonable prices; and we can do so if this House is in favor of the proposition. Congress can authorize or limit the cost at a smaller sum than that in the Senate amendment. The question now is not as to the price particularly, but whether we shall have more torpedo boats as a means of defense. I favor reducing the price.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, we all admit that the great strength of the Navy is its battle ships, its protected cruisers, and its armored cruisers. The submarine torpedo boat is not an offensive weapon in the first instance, but it is a very complete and very effective weapon of defense. Now, the question for this House to settle this morning is whether if you believe that the torpedo boat furnishes an effective defense for a harbor, and if you believe that you can protect every harbor in the United States by means of a torpedo boat at a cost not exceeding the cost of one great battle ship, then the question is whether it is not good judgment, whether it is not good business policy, to authorize the construction of more of these torpedo boats and thus have this cheap and effective defense to our harbors.

Down in my State the greatest seaport town in North Carolina has petitioned the Secretary of the Navy and indirectly this Congress to furnish torpedo boats for the defense of the harbor of Wilmington. There are those who object to submarine boats. A little torpedo boat, carrying only a very few men, offers no striking inducement for a naval officer to seek command of it. If you leave the matter to the naval officers, eliminating the question of price, they will say that we need great battle ships. But here is a question of utility and economy that appeals to my judgment. I believe that this country ought to have more of these submarine torpedo boats. Other nations have them. We ought not to allow our coast to remain undefended when we can defend it so effectively and cheaply by this means. The defense of our harbors by these submarines will obviate the necessity for so many boats costing vastly more money.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Eight minutes.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether a nonexpert has a right to any opinion upon questions of this character; but as long as the Naval Committee of the Senate disagrees with the Naval Committee of the House, and as long as the members of the Naval Committee of the House themselves can not get together upon the proposition, it seems to me that probably some of us who know very little about it should have a right to express our opinion in regard to the matter.

I have on two occasions seen these boats perform. On one occasion I had the pleasure of taking a dive in one, and it seems to me that this boat has effectually solved the question of submarine navigation. It is a boat that can be controlled at will; that can rise and sink at pleasure; that can rise and fire a torpedo and sink again out of sight within less than ten seconds; a boat that, even when it rises for observation or to discharge a torpedo, exposes only a small portion of the turret as a target for the enemy's guns; and even in a smooth sea a moving target exposed only a few inches above the water and exposed for only a few seconds would be secure from harm, though fired upon by the best of gunners.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question for information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. COWHERD. For a question.

Mr. STEELE. My friend says that he has been on board one of these boats. Now, I should like to ask him if one of them was about to go into action, in practical use, and was about to fire a torpedo into an opposing ship, would the gentleman want any of his friends to go down in one?

Mr. COWHERD. I will say this, that I had far rather go in one of these boats to attack a battle ship than to go in an ordinary torpedo boat, or a torpedo-boat destroyer, or in the battle ship itself. It seems to me that, as far as security is concerned, the man in the submarine torpedo boat has a very great advantage over the man in the ship that is on the surface of the water.

Mr. SHATTUC. Do you think that when they were in action you would want to go in any of them?

Mr. COWHERD. Oh, I am not looking for that kind of a job. Like my friend from Ohio, I would a good deal rather fire off discharges with my mouth than from a torpedo tube. Men of high rank in the Navy tell me that we must have every new invention adopted by any other nation on earth, and that we ought to have it among the first of the nations of the earth, not alone for the benefits that come from actual use, but the advantages of intimidation that comes from its possession; and so far the torpedo has been more effectual as a threat than a weapon. Now, the other nations are adopting these boats, and I believe we should keep pace with them. It is said that this invention is only satisfactory in defensive warfare, but I submit to this House that if our Navy had possessed one of these boats when it was lying outside of the harbor of Santiago for more than thirty days in the broiling sun, waiting for an opportunity to attack the Spanish fleet, we would only have needed to carry one of those boats there and send it into the harbor to have blown up all the ships of the Spanish navy without danger of loss on our own part.
